16218

Goyindiai Shivlat Metilai, Bombay

THE PRELUDE TO BOLSHEVISM

Court and Diplomacy in Austria and Germany:

What I Know. By Countess OLGA LEUTRUM With 8 Illustrations Demy 800, cloth, 10s. 6d net. (Second Impression)

"This book is a straining demunciation of Austria and Germany, based upon much intimate observation of "Court and Diplomacy" in both "--THE THES

'Court and Diplomacy' in both "—THE TIMES

"A personal marraine of the events which led up to the war —THE TATLER

to the war —The Tatler

'borms a not unworthy pendant to the famous

' borms a not unworthy pendant to the famous Lichnowsky disclosures We may even go further than this and say that they are of actually greater importance'—EVENING STANDARD

T. FISHER UNWIN LTD.
1 Adelphi Terrace, London, W C 2

16218

THE PRELUDE TO BOLSHEVISM

THE KORNILOV REBELLION

BY

A. F. KERENSKY

Former Prime Minister of Russia, Minister of War and Marine and Commander-in-Chief of the Russian Army

> 947.08 KER

WITH TWO PORTRAITS

T. FISHER UNWIN LTD. LONDON: ADELPHI TERRACE

(All rights reserved)

CONTENTS

PAGES 9-20 21-21
CR OE
25-118
ın ent 917 25–15
70r 48-51

$3 Kornilovs demands Their essence and their The incident of Tcheremisson a illegal form

٦

- appointment Why Kormiov was not dismissed 51-59 4 Kornilovs memorandum of the 10th of August Support of Savinkov Filonenko (Old Style) and Kokoshkin Hopes of the Right at the Moscow
- Conference 50-66 § 5 Conspiracy at Headquarters Suspicions against Lukomsky and Tilhmeney The personages around Kormlov
  - § 6 Kornilov's journey to Petrograd and his memo randa of the led and the 10th of August (Old Style) Incident at the Cabinet meeting
  - § 7 Open and secret activities of the Main Committee of the Officers League Attacks upon the Provi sional Government Campaign in the newspapers Preparation of a coup detat Measures against the Committee

66 76

PRELUDE TO BOLSHEVISM

G

- $ 8. Details about the Sri and the 10th of August.

  Conversation of Kornilov with Kerensky. Incident with Savintov

  P1-07
  - § 9. Reorganization of army and Provisional Government. Palse steps in Gutchkov's administration.

    Efforts to liquidate them. Necessity of utmost prudence.

    97-108
- § 10. Kornilor's speech at the Moscow Conference.

  More about Kornilor's memorands. The attitude of Kornilor towards the Government . 108-113

CHAPTER II

PREPARATION OF THE REBELLION AND ITS BEGINNING . 115-193

- § 11. Conspiracy at the Moscow Conference. Movements of troops. Resolutions about Kornilor's tremovability. Kornilor's conduct in Moscow 115-124
  - § 12 Pretended danger of a Bolshevik rising.
    Weakness of Bolshevism on the eve of the Kornilov rebellion. Its rapid increase after the rebellion and as a consequence of it. 121-183
  - § 13. Reasons for summoning the third corps to Petrograd. Proclamation of martial law in Petrograd. Disarmament of Kronstadt. Work on fortifications in Funland 133-141
  - § 14. The summoning and the movements of the third corps against Petrograd. Its rôle in the plans of the conspirators. Suicide of General Krimov. 141-152.
  - § 15. More about the circumstances of the summoning of the third corps Journeys to Headquarters of Savurkay Murrouga and Targetchesles 189
  - of Savinkov, Mironov and Terestchenko . 152-158

    16 First visit of V. Lyov to Kerensky . 158-163
  - § 17. Second visit of V. Lvov to Kerensky. Kornilov's demands for transference of power to him Kerensky's conversation with Kornilov by direct telegraphic wire Second conversation with V. Lvov in presence of a witness.

§ 18 Was V Lvov acting under Kornilov's instructions? Kornilov's conversation with Savinkov by wire Kornilov's conversation with Trubetz koy Confirmation by Alexaev 172–177

§ 19 Kerensky s alleged complicity History of Lyov s mission 177-186

§ 20 Details about the 26th of August (Old Style) Lyovs visit 186-193

CHAPTER III

LIQUIDATION OF THE REBELLION RÔLES OF • VARIOUS PERSONAGES 195-287

- § 21 The theory of a misunderstanding due to I/rov Vortous opinions of Savinkov The criminal action of Kornilov His appeal Im possibility of delay with counter measures 195-200
- § 22 Extraordinary powers delegated to Kerensky Resignation of ministers Subsequent reproaches of non-democratic conduct Formal defects of the telegram ordering Kornilovs dismussal disputes about its validity 200-212
  § 23 Kerenskys appeal to the population Kornilovs
  - attempt to justify his actions by the appearance of this appeal Rebellious actions of Kormlov before the appeal Text of Kerenskys and Kormlov's appeals Impossibility of delay in view of the presence of Kormlovists in Petrograd 212-218
  - § 24 The days of the rebell on Conduct of Miliukov-Terestchenko Nekrassov and others 218 236
  - § 23 Tilonenios rôle Divilgence on the 29th of August of his activities at Headquarters His participation in the schemes for a dictatorship His ambiguous position at Headquarters 236 246
  - § 26 Savinkov's rôle His friendship with Filonenko His non participation in the conspiracy His deception by Korullov Transgression by Savin kov of his powers His resignation 247-250
  - § 27 Definition of the crime The accomplices

PRELUDE TO BOLSHEVISM

Я

	Liquidation of the rebellion. Movements of the military against Headquarters. Excitement of the democracy. Slowness of General Alexelev.
	the democracy. Singuest of Ocheral Amazon Successful efforts of the Proxisional Government to suppress the rebellion without bloodshed . 201-207

- § 20. Korullov saccompilees. General Alexelev's letter.
  Accusations against Kerendy, Savinkor and Filonenko. Participation of financial circles and the reality of an organized conspiracy 207-271
  - the reality of an organized conspiracy . 207-2

    § 30. Summoning of the troops and the Soviets. Savinkov's statement. Representatives of the Soviets

  - rebellion. Impossibility of a dictatorship; necessity of a coalition 278-283 § 33. Various details: The text of Lyon's statement.
- § 33. Various details: The text of Lvor's statement.
  Kerensty's actions on the 20th of August (Old Style). Criminal nature of Krimov's Intentions.
  More about Savinkov's actions. More about Pilonenko. Attacks upon the Provisional Government. 253-287

INTRODUCTION 1

ATTER the breaking of the Russian front near Tarnopol on the 19th of July 1917 (6th of July, Old Style), it was decided to replace the Commander of the South-western front, General Gutor, and later also the Commander-in-Chief, General Brussilov, and the choice fell on General Kornilov. Kornilov's good qualities and defects were both well known to the Provisional Government, but at this moment his good qualities made him the only suitable candidate. His defects, especially his impetuosity in success, did not then seem to offer any danger; moreover, the views that he professed seemed to exclude the possibility of a conflict. He advocated the cessation of a further ollensive; he, alone among the generals, attributed the responsibility for the failure not only to the soldiers, but also to the officers. He spoke with sympathy of the army elective organizations, of the commissaries, and so forth. Therefore the appointment of Kornilov was due to serious considerations in his favour. and not at all to "irresponsible influences" onthe Premier, Kerensky.

But after his appointment Kornilov immediately revealed his dangerous side. In his telegram accepting the duties of Commander-in-Chief he made a series of demands regarding reforms in the army. These reforms were acceptable in their essence; they were even approved in principle, and were already being worked out by the Provisional Government before Kornilov's nomination, but Kornilov presented his demands in an inadmissible form He interpreted his rights as Com-mander-in Chief in an even broader way than did the Grand Duko Nicholns, and he assumed towards the Provisional Government such a tone as compelled Kerensky to propose his immediate dis-missal to the Provisional Government Konnlov was, however, permitted to retain his command, partly to avoid changes in the High Command nt, that entical moment, and partly because his conduct was ascribed to the influence of adventurers surrounding him at Headquarters After the events of the beginning of July 1917 (Old Style) the breaking of the front and the Bolshevik rebellion in Petrograd), the Provisional Government, supported by the whole of the country and ment, supported by the democracy, quickly took as in particular by the democracy, quickly took as series of energetic steps, including the restoration of capital punishment at the front, and occupied itself in further planning for the reorganizing of the army In spite of this, Kornilov, supported by Savinkov, started an energetic campaign against the Provisional Government On his arrival in Petrograd on the 3rd of August (Old Style) for the purpose of giving the Provisional Government an account of the military situation, Kornilov brought with him a memorandum in which he demanded a series of army reforms, but the dis cussion of the proposed changes in the army was delayed, and Kornilov's memorandum was handed to the War Ministry to be brought into agreement with the proposals of the War Minister. In this way was prevented the publication of Kornilov's memorandum in a form so exceedingly sharp and tactless that it would inevitably have led to his retirement.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This introduction gives a résumé of the events discussed in the book.

INTRODUCTION

In the meantime the attack on the Provisional Government by those in favour of "decisive measures" was being continued. Kornilov's memorandum of the 3rd of August (Old Style) was handed over to Savinkov, the Deputy-Minister of War, for the purpose of co-ordinating it with the plans of the War Minister. Savinkov, who all the time was attempting to carry on a personal line of politics without taking into consideration the directions of his chief, the War Minister, wanted to benefit by this occasion and, with Kornilov's help, to force the Government to accept quickly, en bloc, a programme of most serious military measures at the front and at the rear without these measures having first received the sanction of Kerensky, the Prime Minister and the Minister of War, and even without previously reporting to him about them.

This attempt, made immediately before the Moscow Conference, did not succeed, but still it created great excitement in political circles. This excitement might have manifested itself at the Moseow Conference in an acute form, and the Government took measures to save the unity of the country and to safeguard the army from all possible disputes. Finally, the Moseow Conference went off without a hitch. General Kornilov made a speech which did not realize the expectation; o the extremists, as it differed from the War Minister's speech enunciating his programme only by its tactless form and a brief allusion to the necessity of "measures in the rear, at the front, on the railways and in the factories."

The regeneration of the fighting capacity of the army was the task of the Minister of War, Kerensky from the very first moment when he took over, office from Gutchkov. It was necessary to liquidate the tendency of army reforms which had been carried out during the first two months of the Revolution, but in striving with this object the War Minister, Kerensky, could not permit the toc harsh and premature steps which were demanded by the irresponsible partisans of "strong power." Such steps could give only a negative result in the unbalanced condition in which the country then was. After the Moscow Conference, Savinkov admitted that the plan of reforms traced by the War Minister coincided in the main lines with his and Kornilov's wishes. He admitted also that his conduct during the period just before the Moscow Conference was a breach of discipline, and after this the Prime Minister recalled the order for Savinkov's resignation.

But all the danger from the activities of too hasty "reformers" was nothing in comparison with the terrible consequences of the seeret intrigue which was carried on at the same time at Headquarters and in other places with the object of making a forcible coup a'ctat, and which already by the time of the Moscow Conference had attempted to accustom Russia and Kornilov himself to the idea of the military dictatorship of the latter. Information about conspiracies began to reach the Provisional Government as early as July 1917 (Old Style); the break through near Tarnopol deply touched the feeling of national pride; moreover, after the abortive Bolshevik rising many thought that a courageous and well organized assault on the Government was sure to succeed. Parallel with the open propaganda of the idea of a military dictatorship, seeret work was going on. At the first stage separate conspirative circles were organized in which some military elements took an active part, among them a part of the members of the Main Committee of the All-Russian Officers' League. Later, these circles united, and the technique of the conspiracy improved. Some dubious persons, such as Aladin and Zavoiko, were accepted in their midst; they formed the link between the military conspirators, the civil politicians, and the financial circles that were ponuterins, and the manetan effects that were supporting them. In this way a real organization was created, which later took such a definite shape that General Alexeiev could menace it with revelations at the trial of General Kornilov, should the civil participants, who remained unknown, withhold financial help from the families of the withioid inancial help from the families of the arrested conspirators. At one time the partisans of "strong authority" sent out feelers to Kerensky; not meeting with any sympathy there, they directed their attention to Komilov. "Kerensky does not want to be a dictator; then we will give him one," said V. Lvov. At the moment of the All-Russian Conference in Moscow. moment of the All-Russian Conterence in moscow on the 12th of August (Old Style), the idea of Kornilov's dictatorship was already quite ripe, and the preparation of the coup d'état, anticipating the sympathy of the Conference, was in full swing.

A "reliable" Cossack detachment was summoned to Moscow, and the officer-cadets who were guarding the building where the Conference took, place were given notice that a proclamation of dictatorship was possible during the Conference. A whole series of organizations, before the Conference, carried threatening resolutions to the effect that Kornilov must not be dismissed. A ceremonious entry of Kornilov into Moscow was being organized; various public men "introduced" themselves and presented "reports." A pamplilet was distributed in Moscow entitled "Kornilov-The People's Leader." *

Contrary to the expectations of the conspirators, the desire of all parts of the population for union and the force of the Provisional Government became so evident at the Moscow Conference that all plans to profit by the Conference had to be postponed, on the other hand, the conspirative preparation of the coup d'élat became more intense. A few days later Aladin attempted through the intermediary of Prince George Lyov to obtain an audience with Kerensky, having failed, he and his friends determined to use V. Lvov for this purpose, knowing that his position as a former member of the Provisional Government made it possible for him without difficulty to obtain an audience with the Prime Minister

On the 21st of August (Old Style) Lvov, who was prepared suitably by Aladin and Dobrinsky, went to Petrograd, where he was received by the Prime Minister, but he limited himself to a conversation of a general character about the necessity for strengthening the Government's authority by the inclusion in it of new elements with "power" behind them Kerensky did not attach any im portance to this visit, as at that time many people came to him whose conversation was of this character Lyov returned to Moscow and went immediately to Headquarters with a letter from Aladin to Zavoiko The meaning of this sending of Lyov to Kerensky, as well as of Aladin's attempt to interview the Prime Minister, was that the con spirators wished to secure for themselves means of contact with the Prime Minister independent of the ordinary channels of communication between Headquarters and the Government and his friends were working out the final plan of "military" pressure on the Provisional Govern-ment. It is difficult to determine exactly when Kornilov became a conscious participant in the conspiracy and the head of the movement directed against the Government. In the first information about the conspiracies his name was not mentioned, but already on the 3rd of August (Old Style), in the conversation with Kerensky, Kornilov spoke about a military dietatorship as about a possibility which might become a necessity. At the Moscow Conference the behaviour of Kornilov towards the Provisional Government was very provocative. On the 23rd of August, at Headquarters, Kornilov spoke harshly to Savinkov about the Provisional Government; he found the continuation of Kerensky's power to be obnoxious and unnecessary and so on. But on the following day, on the 24th of August (6th of September, N.S.), before Savinkov's departure to Petrograd, Kornilov told him that he was going loyally to support the Provisional Government; he asked him to inform Kerensky of this, and Savinkov went away reassured. Now on this day the work of the conspirators was already in full

At the same time at Headquarters Kornilov

The presence at Headquarters of the Deputy-Minister of War, Savinkov, from the 22nd to the 24th of August was called for, amongst other reasons, by the necessity for clearing up the conditions for the transference of the army of the Petrograd Military District to the Commander-in-Chief, also the conditions for sending a military detachment from the front at the disposal of the Provisional Government in connection with the proclamation of martial law in Petrograd. The proclamation of martial law in Petrograd was necessitated by the military situation created after the fall of Riga, which had brought the battle front nearer to the capital, by the necessity for transferring the Government institutions to Moscow, by the increase in numbers of refugees from the Baltic provinces and in the licence of the Petrograd garrison, by the proposed transfer of the other troops of the Petrograd Military District to the command of General Kornilov, and by the possibility of riots and various attempts from the Left and from the Right.

All these considerations compelled the Governe ment to demand for its own use a well disciplined." army force. Savinkov, in transmitting this order of the Provisional Government to the Commanderin-Chief, pointed out that the strict conditions for sending troops for the use of the Provisional Government were that the detachment to be dispatched should not include the Caucasian "Savage Division," which was not reliable from the Government's standpoint, and that General Krimov should not be appointed to command it. General Kornilov definitely promised Savinkov on the 24th of August (Old Style) to fulfil exactly the proposal of the Provisional Government and not to send to Petrograd either Krimov or the "Savage Division"; but on the following day the 3rd Cavalry Corps was already moving towards Petrograd, with the "Savage Division" at its head, and the whole under the command of General , Krimov, who had received definite instructions from Kornilov. It was proved later that General Krimov, who had been nominated as commander of one of the armies of the South-western front in order to divert attention from him, had been already, as a matter of fact, for some time at Headquarters working out a plan of military pressure upon the Government. Owing to the events of the 26th of August (September 8th, N.S.), which will be mentioned later, the Provisional Government had time to take measures; Krimov's army did not reach Petrograd (where he was expected by the local conspirative organizations), and he committed suicide. But the rôle of this unit was so important in carrying out the conspiracy that it was only after Kornilov had learned the fate of this detachment that he took actual measures to put an end to the adventure.

While General Krimov's detachment was ap-While General Krimov's detachment was approaching the capital, the conspirators attempted to get hold of the power "legally" by terrorizing the Government. On the 26th of August (8th of September, N.S.) Lvov, who had arrived in Petrograd from Headquarters, presented an ultimatum to the Prime Minister in the name of Kornilov. The Provisional Government must give up its power the same evening, transferring it to General Kornilov, who would form a new Government. Kerensky and Savinkov must immediately, during the night of the 26th-27th of August, depart for Headquarters, as Kornilov proposed to offer them posts as Ministers in his Cabinet and would not take the responsibility for their lives if they remained in Petrograd. At the request of Kerensky, Lvov on the spot put in writing Kornilov's demands; then Kerensky asked Kornilov to come to the direct telegraphic wire, and Kornilov himself repeated to him the proposal to come immediately, confirmed Lyov's authority, and indirectly confirmed all that had been said by the latter. To gain time Kerensky promised Kornilov to come to Headquarters, and at the same time took immediately all steps to cope with the rebellion at its very commencement. In the meanwhile, after the above "favourable conversation" by the direct wire, the most prominent political men in opposition to the Government were invited to Headquarters; the ultimate form of the dictatorship was being finally settled and the composition of the Government agreed upon. But on the following day, the 27th of August (Old Style), a wire was received from the Prime Minister ordering Kornilov to surrender his office immediately and to come to Petrograd. Kornilov did ately and to come to Petrograd. Kornilov did not obey this order, but confirmed to Savinkov by the direct wire his refusal to submit to the Government. On the same day appeared Korentsky's appeal to the population about the Kornilov rebellion and Kornilov's appeal saying that he was "provoked" to make the rebellion and that he was acting against the Government, which was submitting to the "Bolshevik majority of the Soviets" and "working in agreement with the plans of the German General Staff."

2

Thus the armed revolt against the Government began. For two days, while this attempt was being crushed, different "conciliators" besieged the Prime Minister, attempting to persuade him to compromise "as the real force is on the side of Kornilov." But already on the 29th of August (Old Style) it became evident that the whole of the real force of the country was against Kornilov, and, as had been predicted to him by Kerensky himself some time before, Kornilov found himself in splendid isolation. On the 31st of August (Old Style) the rebellion was definitely and bloodlessly suppressed. It was easy to deal with it. Kornilov was not backed by a single important political organization, nor could he rely upon the force of any class. Owing to their political inexperience, Kornilov and those of the officers who were with him mistook for a real force the grumbling of the "man in the street," irritated by the Revolution, but passive by nature, together with the instigation of various adventurers and the promises of support from isolated politicians. The financial help of a certain group of banking-houses artificially exaggerated the dimensions of this movement.

Bit Kornilov's adventure, though predestined to fail, played a fatal part in Russia's destiny, as it shook profoundly and painfully the consciousness of the popular masses. This shock was the more serious as it was unexpected. An adventure of a small group was transformed in the inflamed of a small group was transformed in the inflamed imagination of the masses to a conspiracy of the whole of the bourgeoisic and of all the upper classes against democracy and the working masses. The Bolsheviks, who up to the 31st of August (Old Style) were impotent, became masters in the Petrograd Soviet of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates on the 7th of September, gaining a majority there for the first time during the whole period of the Revo-lution. The same happened everywhere with lightning rapidity. Massaeres of officers again began; again the commanding officers lost all their authority. Throughout the whole country, as in the first days of the March Revolution. as in the first days of the material revolution, there appeared spontaneous organizations which seized the functions of governmental power under the pretext of fighting the counter-revolution. In the soldiers' and workmen's masses the authority In the soldiers' and workmen is masses the authority of the leaders, who were fighting against the ery of "All authority to the Soviets" and who were defending the idea of a national power basing its authority on the will of the whole people, was annihilated. The wave of anarchy broke the will ever succeed in breaking the fatal link between the 27th of August (September 9th, N.S.) and the 25th of October (November 7th, N.S.) 1917.

PRELUDE TO BOLSHEVISM Russian front and overflowed the State. Nobody

20

PREFACE TO THE RUSSIAN EDITION

DEAR FRIENDS,

I send you the stenographic copies of my fundamental statement on the Kornilov affair which have been saved from destruction, with supplementary remarks and explanations which I have now made. I place this manuscript at your disposal and ask you if possible to publish it, but exactly in its present form. This is necessary, though I myself see all its imperfections from a literary point of view. But this is not a literary production, not "memoirs" for history, not the fruit of my unfettered creative faculty. This is only a document, a bit of real life, a document which can give to those who are really anxious to discover the truth about the Kornilov affair, more information than a whole volume of " memoirs." because, without forcing anyone to form an opinion. it gives everyone the opportunity of acting on the lines of the Commission of Inquiry, of doing the work of such a commission himself, sorting out the most important facts of the Kornilov affair. and drawing his own conclusions about it.

To enable the reader to judge fairly is my only desire. My latest notes supplement the statement received by the Commission of Inquiry with additional matter which may in part have been forgotten by or unknown to those who will read the official report of my examination.

27

Certainly in these notes I have been unable to confine myself all the time strictly to the merc facts of the case, and to the narrow limits of the story of Kornilov's rebellion, though I tried my best to refrain from all digression, and especially from argument and deductions. I tried to restrain myself because I found that for me at this moment any other language than that of facts and documents was out of place. Why? You know that better than I. You know better than I how the enemies of the Februar revolution, my enemies from the Right and from the Left, took advantage of the Kornilov affair and how large was the number of those whos faith weakened before the persistent attacks of m slanderers. It was not for those who deliberatel slandered, not for those who deliberately lied, tha I wrote. It is impossible to convince them o anything. They themselves knew perfectly we that they were distorting and making a mocker of the truth.

I wrote for those who knew little or nothing who in the end gave credence to what was sinsolently described as "truth" in the Kornilo affair. I do not want to convince them. Le them, dispassionately and calmly, after acquaint ing themselves with the facts, not from the word of others but by their own reasoning, discover the truth for themselves if not of the whole Kornilo affair, at least of my connection with it. ~

It is not personal interest that urges me at thi terrible time to think and to write of the Kornilov affair. No; I have seen and studied too many people, not to know the real value of popular love and hatred. At the time when I was at my height, and the crowd bowed before me, I quietly said to my friends: "Wait, and they will come and smite me." So it always has been, and so it always will be. No personal motive, I say, but a public one impelled me to write. For now, when the enemies of Russia and of the freedom of all peoples have attained their shameful aims, when our Motherland lies prostrate in the mud, dishonoured and lacerated, when utter despair has seized those who have any honour and conscience left-now those who have attained their aims must not be allowed to justify their Judas-like crime by hypocritically imputing it to 'the treason of others," and the memory of the reat Russian Revolution, which created a new life of truth and sincerity, must not be shadowed by even the smallest doubt as to the honesty of those who were linked to it in life and death.

I want to say a few more words about General Kornilov. I have written many things against him. But I do not desire that more should be found in my words than I intended to say, and that is why I feel obliged to say emphatically that I have never doubted his love for his country.

I saw not in bad intention but in a lack of understanding, and in great political inexperience, the cause of his actions, which menaced Russia with such a vast upheaval. I saw, and many times I tried to restrain him, instigated as he was by the cunning enemies of freedom, or by mere political sharpers.

I did not succeed; the man who in his own way loved Russia passionately was doomed by some power to bring about the victory of those who hated and despised her.

PS.—A few words about the stenographed copy. I gave evidence on October 8, 1917. It took several days to decipher the notes of the evidence, and only five or six days before October 25th I received it to revise and sign. I had not time to do so. The final official text of my evidence before the Commission of Inquiry was not ready when the Bolshevik havoe began.

Having at length an opportunity to look through this text, I felt I had the right to correct it cdi-torially and stylistically, to shorten it here and there, and in some places to add a few additional words, of course without changing the meaning and tone of the evidence; in two places I found it expedient to change slightly the order of the account, so as to bring together separated pieces of evidence about the same point.

I think that the publication of the whole original official report of the Inquiry will be useful also as a picture of the judicial examination of one whom General Alexeiev called the "Master of whom General Alexeiev ealled the "Master of Destiny." It will enable everyone to recall that period, still near but already so distant, when judicial inquiry and courts of justice were absolutely free and independent of, those in power, that brief chapter in the history of Russia when "this bourgeois prejudice" in favour of impartial justice was not trampled on to speed a return to the traditional Mesery period of a return to the traditional Moscow period of "Shemiaka trial," 1

The name of Prince Demetrius Shemiaka of Halitch (1420-53) stands in Russia for a dishonest, venal, partial judge.

MINUTES OF THE EXAMINATION OF A. F. KERENSKY BY THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO THE KORNILOV AFTAIR

(All the dates in this section of the bool—tehen not otherwise stated—are Old Style, which is thatteen days behind the chronology of Great Britain, etc.)

CHAPTER I

§ 1.

<sup>1</sup> [The Commission of Inquiry specially appointed by the Provisional Government for the Kornilov affair planned its work upon a very broad basis, embracing the whole period preceding the rebellion and beginning from the 8th of July, when General Kornilov was appointed Commander-un-Chief of the South-western front.

Although, strictly speaking, none of the events preceding the August days had direct connection with General Kornilov's movement of the 26th-30th of August, as subject to prosecution, yet this widening of the scope of judicial investigation to include the terrible days of the Brd-5th of July had a profound inner meaning

The scope of action of the Investigation Commission could not be narrowed, because the events of those July days (3rd-6th), days of the first

All English words in italies are underlined by A T K

 $^{\rm t}$  The square brackets denote the explanations and supplements added by A  $\Gamma$  Kerensky to the stenographic report of the examination

Bolshevik riot, days of the Tarnopol disgrace, promoted General Kornilov to the highest post in the army, and created throughout Russia that novel atmosphere of wounded patriotism which originated the subsequent events of the 26th-30th of August.

I will not dwell in detail upon the events which preceded the appointment of General Kornilov as Commander-in-Chief of the South-western front. I think no Russian can have forgotten those two dates (the 18th of June and the 6th of July 1917), the great impulse of self-sacrifice of the troops of the 18th of June, and the sombre orgy of the devastators of Tarnopol and Kalusch.

Who does not recollect the time when the hopes of salvation and honourable peace reborn in Russia were smashed by the double blow dealt to the Russian army by the German Government, alarmed for its future? Having tolerated the fall of the Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg and a liberal tendency in Vienna after the 18th of June, the rulers of the Central Powers decided to employ extreme measures in their attempt to prevent the regeneration of the Russian army and to blow up the Russian front.

One example is sufficient to give an idea of how this work was organized by the German General Staff.

I was at the Western front near Molodetchno at the time of the Bolshevik "revolt" of the 3rd-5th of July. Our troops were preparing to launch an oliensive. Here, while visiting the front treneles, where as yet nothing was known of the Petrograd events, one of my aides-de-camp took from a group of soldiers a fresh copy of the Bolshevik paper "The Comrade," published in Vilna by the German General Staff for the benefit of the Russian soldiers. This copy contained an article upon "Russia and the Offensive," dated "Petrograd, July 3rd" (June 20th, Old Style), which with strange foresigld made the following statement: "According to news received from Russia, the Russian offensive in Galicia has excited great indignation among the Russian people. Tremendous crowds assemble in all the large towns to protest against this mass slaughter of Russin's sons. Indignation against England, whom all consider to be the originator and cause of the prolongation of this terrible war, increases daily. Kerensky is openly denounced as a traitor to the people. A luge manifestation has taken place in Moscow, whither Cossaeks have been sent to quell the disturbance. The present situation cannot last. 'Russkoe Slovo' states that martial law has been lately enforced again in Petrograd. A great many Left Socialists have been arrested during the past week. The paper adds that many of the extreme Left leaders were obliged to leave Petrograd for the interior of Russia."

Naturally, the ground was well prepared for the reception of the Russian accounts of the real disorders of July 3rd-5th, which reached the front trenches a few days later; and were de-scribed by the well-known and widely circulated "Russian" newspapers of the front as a revolt of the proletariat against the government of "the traitor Kerensky," who had sold himself to the capitalists of England and France.

The same kind of attack from the front and the rear was launched against the Russian soldiery all along the front from the Carpathians to Riga. The break-through of the Germans at Tarnopol completely unbalanced our higher command, and yet it was necessary to do the utmost to re-establish the front as speedily as possible General Kor nilov, Commander of the 8th Army, was at that time appointed Commander in Chief of the South western front

The narrative of my deposition begins from that moment, the beginning of it, as being of no importance, is omitted

General Gutor, whose name is mentioned at the beginning of the deposition, had in May been appointed Commander in Chief of the South western front The commanders of the other fronts were Northern front, General Klembov sky, Western, General Denikin, General Stcherbatchov, General A Brussilov was Generalissimo, with General Lukomsky as Chief of General Staff 1

Kerensky -General Kornilov was appointed Commander in Chief of the South western front under the following circumstances General Gutor lost his head, and Kornilov seemed to me the only man at the front capable of immediately replacing him It seemed, then, that the dangerous tendency of his character—a too great impetuosity in case of success—would present no danger during ? For the time when that tendency retreat could become dangerous was still far distant The retreat would bring into play all his positive qualities decision, organizing talent, his initiative and independence. That was the reason for his appointment to the South western front. There was no one else Personally, I considered these reasons as all sufficient

[The decision to exercise actively the extensive rights of a military commander, the daring to act without fear of responsibility, without hiding be hind another s back—these were the qualities most needed at the time Unfortunately, these qualities were seldom to be found among our higher army command. It must be remembered that the active struggle against the disruption of the army, against the "soft-skins" and the "bagmen," the defeatists and pro-Germans, a struggle which often necessitated the use of armed force, was almost entirely earried on by the War Minister's commissaries and army committees.

Nearly the whole staff of the higher command were, so to speak, "not there" for all practical purposes during the period (May-June) of the most strenuous efforts for the re-establishment of military efficiency on all the fronts. And yet a true regeneration of the army could not be achieved without authoritative leaders, recognized as such by the whole mass of the army. Therefore, I think it obvious why every conspieuous personality, every man of initiative and action, met with the entire support of the Minister of War and received promotion. Therefore it is also obvious why I promptly and decidedly promoted General Kornilov, in spite of the original "ultimative" methods of his activity.

If we recall the whole military-political situation at the beginning of July 1917, it becomes obvious that the substance of General Kornilov's "demands" was by no means an America discovered by him, but a somewhat peculiar formula applied by him to the measures partly passed, partly planned by the Provisional Covernment and fully corresponding to the frame of mind of all responsible democratic and liberal circles.

Russia was shaken and stunned by this combined blow—by the Bolshevik attempt to "break up the inner front" at Petrograd and the actual

&lt;sup>1</sup> Cowardly soldiers and soldiers travelling about buying and speculating.

picreing of the front of the 11th Army at Tarnopol. The Bolshevik attempt was almost immediately suppressed. The task of stemming the German invasion was a hundredfold more difficult. Prompt and heroic measures were necessary, and their adoption became all the more easy, as all Russia was extraordinarily unanimous in her estimate of the current events and of the measures to be taken against the double enemy.

"The meeting of the committees of the N eorps" (according to a telegram received by me)
"considers promoters of discontent, traitors and men who incite others to breaches of discipline and disobedience to battle-orders to be inadmissible in our ranks. We demand of all regimental committees the immediate arrest of all such individuals and the bringing of them up for trial to the army committees. We demand that all comrades of our corps should detain every individual appearing in the trenches or quarters of a unit to which he does not belong; all such individuals should be brought up to the regimental committees for identification."

The executive committee of the South-western front and the army committee of the 11th Army, reporting to me on the situation created after the 6th of July, in a joint telegram dated July 8th, declared that the members of the frontal army committee and the commissaries "unanimously admit that the situation demands the adoption of the most extreme measures, as it is urgent to stop at nothing to save the Revolution from peril. To-day, with the consent of the commissaries and the committees, the Commander-in-Chief of the South-western front and the Commander of the 11th Army have issued the order to shoot deserters. Let the whole country learn the whole truth. Let her shudder and form the resolve to punish the faint-hearted, who betray and destroy Russia and the Revolution."

On July 11th the Central Executive Committee of the Social Revolutionaries and Social Democrats and the Executive Committee of the Soviet issued a proclamation "to all the people," peasants, work-men and workwomen, to all councils and committees, to the army. In this proclamation the C.E.C. made the following statement: "We recognize the Provisional Government as the government for the saving of the Revolution. We acknowledge it to be a government invested with full and unlimited powers. Let its orders be law to everybody. Anyone disobeying any battle-order of the Provisional Government is a traitor. For cowards and traitors there is no mercy. Remember that only a hard struggle will bring peace to Russia and to all peoples. By retreating you will lose both land and freedom, you will lose peace. Victorious German Imperialists will force you to fight again and again for their interests. Let there be no traitors nor cowards among you. Only one way is open to you—forward."

On July 13th the "Izvestia" of the Soviet of

On July 13th the "Izvestia" of the Soviet of S. & W. D.¹ published the following, in an article entitled: "Fneed by an Imminent Peril." "The work of irresponsible demagogues has already borne its bloody fruit upon the battle-field. Dissension and confusion have penetrated the ranks of the army... And the army's force mad efficiency have vanished like n plumtom... The army is dissolved and broken-up, dismembered units are in flight before the enemy.... Our armies are retreating; worse still—they are running away, maddened by fear. We tremble for the fate of Russia and the Revolution, and we are filled with shame The troops, which fought bravely beneath the rod of Tsarism, have become a mob of miserable cowards now that the banner of liberty is hoisted above them it is a disgrace."

· Soldiers and Workmen's Deputies.

As if answering the feeling of alarm which had taken possession of all the democratic centres, the army commissaries of the South western front, with B V Savinkov at their head, sent the following telegram "We feel bound by our conscience to declare what measures are to be taken There is no choice death-penalty for those who refuse to risk their lives for their country, for land and liberty" By this time my answer to the above quoted telegram of the Executive Committee of the South-western front had been already received at the front "I fully approve the truly revolutionary and highly proper decision adopted by the Executive Committee of the Southwestern front at this crucial moment"

Upon the background of this great tide of patriotism, which swept over the whole country, the contents of the telegram sent by the Commander of the 11th Army (General Baluev) were but the natural expression of the general feeling "Having become acquainted with the spirit of the army, d am horror struck at the peril and disgrace that threaten Russia Time presses All the high command and officers' staff are powerless to do anything except sacrifice their lives Paragraph 14 of the Declaration (i.e. the right of shooting on the spot) cannot be executed, because the chief is single handed against hundreds and thousands of armed men, bent upon flight As a faithful son of Russia, having devoted my hie to the service of my country, I consider it my duty to declare to the Government that Russian democracy and the Revolution are perishing" (The general further proposes a series of measures concluding with the death-penalty, and adds ) "I hold that the suppression of the death-penalty in the army was a mistake. If the Government sends men to die from enemy bullets, why does it grant cowards and traitors the possibility of escape ? "

The solidarity of opinion is clearly emphasized by the following extract from General Baluiev's telegram "All literature circulated at the front must be approved by the Soviet of S & W. D and the army committees"

No wonder General Kornilov, suffering the same great anxiety as other patriots, expressed the general opinion, but with characteristic eccentricity he concluded his famous telegram of the 11th of July concerning the death-penalty with the following announcement "Enough! I declare that if the Government does not confirm the measures proposed by me, and thereby deprives me of the only means of saving the army and using it for the fulfilment of its true object, the defence of the country and of liberty, I, General Kornilov, will arbitrarily resign my post of Commander in Chief"

Such was the will of the country for its salvation It could not be otherwise The Provisional Government had not overrated the certainty of obtaining universal support when it demanded decisive action at the most critical moment

The front of the 11th Army was pierced upon the 6th of July, the law committing for high treason all persons guilty of meiting officers and soldiers to disobedience of military orders in wartime was published on the same day General Kormlov was appointed Commander in Chief of the South western front in the night of the 7th-8th of July. On the morning of the 8th of July I issued the following order, No. 28: "After reading the reports presented to me dealing with events at the South-western front, and particularly the grievous events which took place in the 11th Army, I consider it my duty once again to call attention to the unflushingly relief to a place of the source. to the unflinehingly gallant conduct of the commanding and officers' personnel, proving their devotion to liberty and the Revolution, and their unalterable love of their country. I command discipline to be re-established in the army with the full use of revolutionary authority, including armed force, to save the army. The disruption of the army cannot be tolerated. All criminal elements, engaged in written or oral propaganda inciting to disobedience and refusal to carry out battle-orders, must be immediately eliminated from the armv."

On the 12th of July the Provisional Government (from V. N. Lvov<sup>1</sup> to V. M. Tehernov) passed a unanimous vote, temporarily re-establishing the death-penalty at the front and setting up revolutionary martial tribunals. On the 13th of July the Ministers of War and of Home Affairs obtained the right to suppress papers and periodicals "inciting to disobedience to military chiefs; to revolt and civil war." I also received the right to close meetings, dissolve congresses, etc. A whole series of laws and measures was adopted by the Government in less than a fortnight.

Of course (I must again repeat it) all this was rendered possible by the extraordinary unanimity of all classes of Russian society and by the proof given by all governmental and social, especially democratic, circles of a thorough understanding of the existing situation. It was the beginning of a remarkable sobering of the populace, a rapid growth of a consciousness of responsibility towards the State, a period of an unheard-of dechae of anarchic-Bolshevik influence upon the masses. It became the Government's task to accentuate these tendencies, to strengthen the unity of the all-national front. At the same time the Government was obliged to keep a close watch, lest the reaction against Left Maximalism should lead to a Maximalism from the Right]

High Procurator of the Holy Synod; not to be confounded with Prince Lyoy, the former Premier.

I recollect that A A Brussilov (who, by the way, like all the commanding officers and military authorities, greatly distrusted Kornilov's somewhat naive impetuosity) at first disapproved of Kornilov's appointment to Gutor's post, and I was obliged to use a certain amount of pressure to overcome his (Brussilov's) hesitation. I adduced the same reasons in favour of Kornilov to Brussilov which I have given you

Charman —Concerning the conference of July 16th at the Stavka (Headquarters) What were the views expressed at that conference, and did it not become the cause which subsequently brought about Kormlov's succession to Brussilov?

Kerensky—The conference of July 16th certainly played a part in Kornilov's appointment I must say, this conference produced upon ine and upon all my coffeagues (Terestchenko, Baranovsky and others) a disheartening impression, absolutely dist The Commission which examined me consisted of the following members Chairman, Shablovsky (chief military and naval prosecutor), appointed members Kolokolov, Ukraintsev Raupakh, elected members members of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet of Soldiers and Workmen's Deputies Krokhmal and Laber The examination took place in my study at the Winter Palace heartening. I called this conference upon my own initiative and asked Brussilov to invite all the military authorities he could bring together. . . . You know the names. There is no need to repeat them.

36

Chairman.-No.

The members present at the conference of July 16th at the Stavka were: Kerensky, Premier and Minister of War and Marine; Terestchenko, Minister of Foreign Affairs; General Alexeiev, attached to the Provisional Government; Generalissimo Brussilov; his Chief-of-Staff, General Lukomsky; General Klembovsky, Commander-in-Chief of the Northern front; General Denikin, Commander-in-Chief of the Western front; his Chiefof-Staff, General Markov; General Ruzsky, former Commander-in-Chief of the Northern front; Chief Engineer General Velitehko; Savinkov, Commissary of the South-western front; officials of the War Minister's cabinet and of the Generalissimo's staff.

The conference was called for purely strategical military purposes. It was of the greatest importance for the Provisional Government, and particularly for the War Minister, to form a eircumstantial and impartial view of the real situation at the front and of the strategical consequences of the break through; to sketch out a plan of future military policy, etc. This last item was particularly important to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, who therefore accompanied me to the conference. We desired to hear the opinion of men with a three years' was experience. war experience, men who had passed through the hard school of the débacle of 1915 and the adversities of 1916. The observations I had made concerning the preparation and the carrying-out of the offensive of 1917 filled me with the gravest fears and misgivings. And I desired that the immediate problems of defence should be defined, however generally, by a conference of the most experienced former, present and, maybe, future chiefs Naturally, these fears engendered certain doubts as to the expediency of General Brussilov's 1emaning at the post of Generalissimo

Alas! No leaders were to be found at this conference, not even ordinary military specialists attaining the modern war standard. There were attaining the modern war standard There were none, not from luck of capacity in those present, but, I am firmly convinced, from lack of wish to reveal it. The possibility of settling old scores obscured everything else. All the misfortunes, the catastrophes, the disgrace, the horior of the first three years of war no longer existed. for them Everything had gone well in the past The reason of all reasons, the source of the July débacle, lay solely and exclusively in the Revolution and its influence upon the Russian soldier Soldau, Warsaw, Kovno, Peremyshl, San, Kovel, Mitava, etc., etc.-all these had not been, had never been The wine of hate for all things new had gone to those old wise heads Russia and the Provisional Government ob tuned no counsel, no aid from the military chiefs On the other hand, here for the first time General Denikin outlined the programme of the "revanche," that "music of the future" of military reaction, that music of the factors of minicary reaction, which inspired many and many a partisan of Kornilov's movement. Some points of Denikin's programme had already been presented to the Provisional Government in the form of demands Thus at the very beginning of the Tarnopol break through the Main Committee of the Army and Navy Officers' League, m a highly significant telegram addressed to the Provisional Government, spoke as follows: "We insist upon the re-establishment of full power, authority and disciplinarian rights in commanders of Kerensky.-Kornilov was not present at this eonference. He received a telegram from the Stavka which seemed to imply that his presence was not desired. I cannot recall the exact text, but the tenor of it was to that effect: view of the critical situation at the Southwestern front you will be unable to come."

ranks."1

[General Kornilov, speaking of this telegram in his statement, says: "I received the telegram No. 5067 from the Generalissimo to the effect that, owing to the situation at the South-western front, my arrival at the Stavka is considered to be impossible, and that I am invited to present

my considerations."]

In the midst of all the disheartening opinions and proposals expressed by all the generals present, the telegram from Kornilov seemed to shed a faint ray of light. It was deeply oppressive, but still it contained a more impartial attitude towards the soldier mass and the commanding staff. I must say, that all the generals, particularly Alexeiev, Ruzsky and Denikin, evinced a complete lack of strategical and political insight. According to them the state of mind of the private soldiers lay at the root of all the evil. For instance, one of them considered that the only reform necessary to prevent soldiers from deserting was the immediate re-establishment of the salute.

[The general alluded to in the last sentence was not Denikin.1

Such were the judgments expressed. And upon such a background General Kornilov's opinion, that the present calamities were not solely due to the soldiers' demoralization, but also to the original and long-standing deficiency of the commanding staff; that therefore, simultaneously, with punitive measures immediate steps should be taken for the improvement of the commanding body—such a view tended to produce the impression that here was a man with a deeper and wider outlook upon the situation than that of his compeers. Lately it became obvious to me, by the style of the telegram, that it had not been drafted by him. Strange to say, all General Kornilov's appointments after he became Generalissimo were based upon an inverted principle. He immediately began to promote and reinstate men belonging to the oldest traditions. Take, for instance, the wholesale dismissal of the commanding staff of the South-western front, which occurred as soon as General Kornilov transferred thither Generals Denikin and Markov. They started a general removal of all commanders sympathizing with the new army organizations. I was obliged to come into serious conflict with Kornilov, who was bent upon promoting to a high post General Letchitsky, an officer utterly inacceptable under the existing novel conditions. In fine, Kornilov's policy was in such absolute contradiction to the contents of his own telegram produced at the conference of July 16th. that I believe this telegram to have been written either by Savinkov or by Filonenko; I cannot be certain which of the two, but that one of them wrote it.

them wrote it.

[General Kornilov's constant tendency to appoint to posts of high command partisans of the prerevolutionary methods of army administration and his passive attitude towards the absolutely inadmissible conduct of some commanders in their treatment of the soldiers, his indifference, to say the least of it, towards the campaign set up by some of the commanders and staffs against the army organizations, dione me to despair I was completely bewildered, until I realized that General Konnlov had two programmes—one for presenting to the Provisional Government and another for daily practice For instance, one of his reports upon army organizations presented to the Provisional Government ran thus "It is surely visional Government ran thus matter for wonder that the young elected bodies have scarcely ever swerved from the right path, and have so often proved themselves quite equal to the situation, even to making the supreme sacrifice in blood in their valorous military activity The committees symbolizing in the eyes of the masses the existence of the Revolution guarantee the calm acceptance of all measures at the front and in the rear indispensable for the salvation of the army and the country" In practice, however, the battle front which was the most highly organized (namely the South western front) became speedily disintegrated owing to the course adopted by Generals Denikin and Markov, ardently supported by the "driller," General Erdeli And yet the services rendered by the Executive Committees and the commis saries of the South western front in the raising of the army efficiency and the struggle against anarchy at the time of the break through were absolutely at the time of the break through were absolutely invaluable. I regret being obliged to endorse the following estimate of General Denikin's poles stated in a resolution of the South western front Executive Committee. "From the moment of General Denikin's appointment to the post of Commander in Cluef of the South western front, the staff began directly to oppose all elected army organizations. . . . Great partiality was practised in relation to the commanding body. Officers violating the rights acquired by the Revolution are encouraged, while those working in touch with the elected organizations are perseented." The stall not only longed to violate these rights, but actually attempted to restore corporal punishment and resort to blows. By the way, General Alexeiev, in his well-known letter to P. N. Miliukov, gives the following explanation of the hostile South-western front towards Denikin and Markov. "The committee had accounts to settle with Denikin and Markov, who put a stop to the committee's grabbing of public money." I consider it my duty to refute this entirely false accusation. The Executive Committee of the South-western front was one of the most serious, self-denying, patriotic army organizations which, after the 6th of July, raised a protest against the "soft-skins" and authoritatively supported the Government in its struggle against the Bolshevik soldier rabble.]

Chairman.—By the way, a propos of this conference, Denikin took part in it.

Kerensku.-Yes.

Chairman .- He stated that his views upon the immediate reforms needed in the army received your approval.

Kerensky.-No. Denikin is a good and brave man. You see, when I arrived at the conference (remember, that it assembled at the moment of defeat, not success), I saw at once that all the generals' pent-up resentment against me and the new régime was ready to burst out. But Alexeiev, Brussilov and Ruzsky, men better versed in diplomacy, restrained themselves, although boiling with indignation, while Denikin behaved like a simple, straightforward soldier. His speech was such as not one of them, under any other Government, would have ever dared address to the Head of the Government. Such a speech would not even have been listened to under the old régime. contained personal attacks on mc. . . . So, after Denikin's speech, in order to emphasize that I took a different view of such plain-speaking from that of the old regime, and valued liberty of opinion, as well as to avert a scandal (the other generals were nonplussed), I rose, held out my hand to him, and said: "Thank you, General, for the courage of frankly stating your opinion."

I meant to show my appreciation of his behaviour, not of his speech. Later, I opposed Denikin's point of view and defended my own. However, Denikin only sharply expressed the opinion silently shared by all the others. The immediate dissolution of all elected bodies, the abolition of all rights proclaimed in the Declaration, the resumption of full authority and disciplinarian rights by the commanding officers, including the re-establish; ment of the salute-such was General Denikin's programme. [In a word, it meant the immediate return to the old order in the army.] However, even his adherents there present admitted that such wholesale reaction was impossible at such short notice.

General Denikin himself, in his telegram of August 27th, No. 145, addressed to the Provisional Government upon Kornilov's dismissal, refers to his speech at the Stavka Conference on July 6th in the following terms: "On July 6th, at the Conference with members of the Provisional Government, I declared that by n series of acts it had destroyed and corrupted the army and tramplent our battle-standards in the mud." He was 50 firmly persuaded that no Government would have tolerated such open criticism and attacks from its subordinate, that he "considered his being allowed to remain Commander-in-Chief as a sign of the Government's confession of its heavy sin." . . . He never understood that a Government, acting upon the principle of right and truth, can and must listen calmly to every honest and independent opinion.

(What irony of Fate ! General Denikin, arrested as Kornilov's accomplice at the South-western front, was saved from the fury of the maddened soldiers by the members of the Executive Committee of the South-western front and by the Commissaries of the Provisional Government. I remember with what emotion the never-to-beforgotten N. N. Dukhonin and I read the account of how a handful of brave men escorted the arrested Generals Markov, Denikin and others across the town, through a crowd of thousands of soldiers thirsting for their blood; how they boarded a train and, having cleared the rails by force, drove them safely out of Berditchev. How very unfair is General Alexeiev's statement in his letter to Miliukov, that "the passions and hatred of the rude mob and soldiery of Berditchev were artificially fostered by the unclean wretched personality of Mr. N. and the corrupt personnel of the committee revealing demagogie tendencies," and that "if the base agents at Berditchev, gambling with the rude passions of the rabble, fail to play their game-court-martial and execution at Bertheir game—court-inform find execution as Boldutchev—they have other means at their command, namely lynching by the insulted democracy."

N. N. Dukhonm's own fate has given a striking example that, with leaders actually playing with the passions of the mob, the victims are doomed to perish ]

Chairman - Did not this conference provide a basis for the subsequent replacing of General

Brussilov by Kornilov 9

Kerensky.—Yes—in a way. We had generally a very limited choice. To my mind, General Brussilov could not remain Besides, he seemed quite at a loss what to do next, and was obviously utterly unable to continue the policy of leaning more upon the common soldiery than upon the officers Meanwhile the situation was such that events might have developed with eatastrophic suddenness, if there had been no firm hand to control the entire front. We expected a further development of the Genman offensive. On the other hand, I was obliged to consider the fact that the appointment of an adherent of Denikin's policy would provoke a simultaneous revolt question.

Chairman—And were there no hints or, perhaps, political considerations of a certain kind pointing to General Brussilov's reactionary tendencies, or even counter-revolutionary aspirations? Or were there no such data, nothing but hesitation and indecision?

Kerensky—I had observed even before the debâcle that, strictly speaking, the Stavka had no plan; there was no stability; they never seemed to antiespate events, but to follow in their train. For instance, I remember Biussilov's consternation when the offensive did not develop as rapidly as was expected. I saw he was quite meapable of disentangling the situation on all the fronts taken as a whole. But there were no data whatever as to Brussilov's being a counter-revolutional content of the statement of the state

tionary Simply I deemed it impossible for him to remain at the head of the army, owing to his lack of a definite orientation At this conference he opposed no opinion of his own to all the arguments expressed by the commanders [passively submitting to the general tendency]

All this created such a situation that, if Brussilov had remained, we should have faced coming events not total ignorance of our next move. We could not tell what course we should adopt on the morrow, what would happen to the arany, whether we should advance simultaneously in all directions, etc.

directions, etc
[The scheme of the offensive of July 1917 consisted of a series of attacks to be delivered against the enemy on all the fronts in succession, thereby preventing the concentration of his forces on the point of attack. The success of this general offensive depended upon its rapid development, but in reality all calculations were upset from the start, the connection between the operations at various fronts severed, with the consequence that the entire severed force. that the entire aim of the operation was frus-tiated As soon as this state of things became evident I advised General Brussilov before the 6th of July to stop the general offensive But I met with no approval Separate offensives were I met with no approval Separate offensives were continued at different fronts, but all spirit and sense had forsaken them Nothing remained but the mettri of movement, which only tended to augment the rum and dissolution of the army. I remember that Kormilov's telegiam of the 11th of July, pointing to the necessity of "immediately stopping the offensive on all fronts," played an important put in his appointment to the post of Generalissimo]

§ 2.

Chairman.—Has not a certain conversation taken place with Savinkov and Filonenko in a railway car, concerning the conference, which explains our previous question?

Kerensky.—I do not know which conversation you refer to. There were several conversations.

Chairman.—About replacing Brussilov by Koruilov.

Kerensky.—I should like to say that Savinkov ought to be distinguished from Filonenko. As far as I can remember, Savinkov accompanied me to the conference. . . Oh, no—he arrived from the South-western front [though at my summons]. He was commissary at that time. At first I did not even know that Filonenko was at the Stavka. I was acquainted with Savinkov's work at the South-western front; I had spoken to him, whereas Filonenko was personally very little known to me. I met him almost for the first time at the Stavka. After the conference of July 16th conversations did take place in the railway-car. I do not remember whether Filonenko was present or not, but I do not think he could speak in the same way as Savinkov would.

Chairman.—Perhaps in connection with this conference conversations had taken place concerning changes in the Government. Who were the Cabinet Ministers proposed, or what were the changes anticipated?

Kerensky.—I do not at all remember what happened on the train. I was then already Prime Minister. . . . I do not remember whether the crisis was over then or not. It seems as if all this happened before the Cabinet had been reformed.

I cannot say. I do not remember. If the Cabinet was incomplete, then the conversation did take place. That crisis lasted a long time, a whole month, I believe, and ended in my resigning. It was the only way to force public opinion to come to any decision. Generally, I must say, concerning your references to different conversations in which I took part, that conversations are freely going on around me. I never forbid anyone, not even a sub-lieutenant (let alone a commissary), to express his opinion, give advice, etc. But such talk seldom influences subsequent events.

seldom influences subsequent events.

[During the examination proper these questions concerning conversations in the railway-carriage seemed to me rather unnecessary and irrelevant. But now, having become acquainted "at leisure" with the different statements upon the Kornilov affair, I see the use that was attempted to be made of such conversations and find it necessary to discuss the matter more fully.

Now I understand that the Commission of Inquiry was trying to clear up the question of the "irresponsible influences" upon the Prime Minister. Here are those of the statements touching upon this question and made in connection with the Kornilov affair with which I became acquainted. General Kornilov says that he "openly" declared to Savinkov that he considered "Kerensky a man of weak character, easily influenced by others." Savinkov relates: "On the way, I learnt in the train from A. F. Kerensky that he had summoned me from the South-western front in view of the formation of a new Cabinet based upon the principle of a strong revolutionary power. . . . However, after our arrival at Petrograd, Kerensky's combination did not come into existence. The problem of a strong revolutionary power remained unsolved, but General Kornilov was appointed Generalissimo, Filonenko Commissary-in-Chief, and I Deputy Minister of War" "On the way," says Filonenko, "ue drew the Prime Minister's attention to the urgent necessity of cleating a strong authority, and were energetically supported by M I Terestchenko The question of forming an inner 'War Cabinet' of Government members an inner 'War Cabinet' of Government members was particularly discussed This idea, which received A F Kerensky's full approval, was warmly supported by Terestchenko "Lastly, in Savinkov's supplementary statement there was a special clause 4, "On mesponsible advisers," which ran as follows "I became convinced that both N V Nekrassov and M I Terestchenko with Kerensky's knowledge interfere in the affairs of the Military Department." But both Nekrassov and Terestchenko were fully constituted members of the Provisional Government and as such had of the Provisional Government and as such had full right to "interfere," even without my "knowledge," in the affairs of any department. They not only possessed that right, but it was their duty to do so, as members of the Provisional Government jointly responsible for each other, and M I Terestchenko Minister for Foreign Affairs Military problems touched them both very closely. I consulted them upon questions of military policy more frequently than any other ministers. Only a man very unversed in statesmanship could in this case speak of "irresponsible influences" "Besides which" continues Savinkor, "I became convinced that A P Kerensky is advised upon affairs of state by persons not belonging to the Provisional Government. Thus Colonel Baranov sky and Flag Capitain Muraviey, and also, to the best of my belief, Gotz and Zenzinov offered advice about the formation of a new Cabinet, while Messrs Balavinsky and Virubov discussed V. N. Lvov's 'ultimatum'"

Balavinsky and Viiubov, as will be seen later, rendered me very important services upon the evening of the 26th of August—and that is all I will also dilate further on the circumstances in which Colonel Baranovsky and Flag Captain Muraviev have expressed their views—Concerning the hints as to the influence of Gotz and Zenzinov, I could greatly enlarge the list of "irresponsible advisers" by adding to it the iepresentatives of other political parties (C.D., S.R., S.D., etc.), whom I invariably consulted every time the Government was reformed. I do not think it possible to form a serious Cabinet without learning the wishes and tendencies of the political parties called upon to support the Government.

When, however, the question was not of a political agreement for the formation of a coalitionary Government, but one of a measure of administration—then the most influential "irresponsible advisers" remained powerless, even "Gotz and Zenzinov" For instance, both of them decidedly protested in the name of the SR party against B V Savinkov's appointment as Deputy Minuster of War, and yet he was appointed in a party of War.

of War, and yet he was appointed in spite of them "Moreover," continues Savinkov in his dis closures, "Colonel Baramovsky often expressed his views concerning the appointments and dis mussals of persons belonging to the high command" But Colonel Baramovsky was chief of my Military Cabinet, whose duty it was to give me correct information and conclusions upon all military questions which came before me Moreover, the only effect of his opinion about the staff of the military department was in helping me to examine each ease more fully. Savinkov even added my eighteen-year-old nides-de-camp to the list of my "irresponsible advisers." Well, here he beats me, and I am powerless to refute this accusation.

 $\circ$  C D = Constitutional Democrats S R = Social Revolutionaries, S D = Social Democrats

I have purposely dwelt upon these details to give an example of how history is written and legends created. The events of the 3rd-5th of July in Petrograd, the break-up of the front, the Government erisis, complications with various nationalities, economic difficulties, the food crisis—offered problems which the Government, diminished numerically (the Cadets having only just left it) had to cope with all at once.

On me devolved primarily the task of dealing with these matters: for almost twenty-four hours at a stretch I had to divide my time between supreme State Government, Home policy, reports of the Ministries of War and Marine, and continuous trips to the front or the Stavka. At such a time, the railway-car meant rest-a respite, when onc could cease to be Prime Minister and just sit quetly and listen, and when one could also allow one's companions to indulge in unconventional talk upon all subjects; for my closest collaborators also worked like convicts when not on the train-And now such a railway-respite assumes historical significance, the chance companions of a casual talk upon the burning topics of the day transform talk upon the burning topics of the day transform it into a political event of which they were the centre. And when later the Provisional Government does not act upon "our report," naturally all the blame is laid upon other advisers, who had played upon the "weakness" of the Premier. Men who wish to govern must possess the art of listening silently and letting others speak out their thoughts, for this brings one into closer touch with the yet unconscious hopes and aspirations of different social circles. We were, of course, not exempt from work even on the train. So on this occasion I listened attentively to all Savinkov's conclusions upon military questions and to his character-sketch of General Kornilov, as both of them were destined to occupy more responsible posts in the future.]

$ 3.

Chairman.—What was your attitude, sir, and that of the Provisional Government, towards General Kornilov's proposals regarding the enforcement of army discipline and the restoration of order at the front and in the rear?—also as regards his programme and demands after he was appointed Generalissimo?

Kerensky.—Well, you see, here you must take both sides of the question: the substance of his desires and the outward forms he wished them to assume. In substance his scheme was already partly being worked out by the Provisional Government and was expected to be put into practice according to the plan: co-ordination of relations between the committees, the commissaries and the commanding staff; definition of rights and duties; army discipline, such as the re-establishing and enforcing of the officers' authority, etc. All this was already being worked out. The only novelty that presented itself was this: proposals became demands, presented to the Provisional Government by General Kornilov. This was strongly emphasized. Moreover, he specially insisted on repusals, such as death-penalty, revolutionary tribunals in the rear, etc. Part of the Provisional Government advocated the full acceptance of General Kornilov's "demands" Myself and the majority of the Government were of opinion that Koimlov's demands, like all the proposals of other commanders, however highly placed, could only serve as material for free discussion by the Provisional Government, as we could not on principle deviate from our adopted course of action, which consisted in gradually introducing necessary measures without creating undue shocks in the measures without creating undue shocks in the army and the country. As to the form of Kornilov's demands, here the Provisional Government as a body was obliged to protest emphatically against Komilov's ultimative manner of addressing the Government, in order to safeguard the rights and the prestige of the Provisional Government as the Supreme Authority of the State.

General Kornilov's first ultimatum was presented with a state of the provisional Government as the Supreme Authority of the State.

unmediately after his appointment as Generalissimo and before he had even left Bendery. I sent him the customary telegram of congratulation, expressing the hope that under his command, etc. . , in short, all that is usually said upon such occasions. It seemed to me that the man honestly desired to and would work In reply to my telegram I at once received the first ultimatum You know, the Teheremissov affan I told the Provisional Government that we must dismiss Kornilov at once, that if we wanted to restore discipline in the army, we must begin by giving an example in high quarters. My proposal was not accepted, and Korndov interpreted our indulgence as a sign of impoience.

[As a matter of fact, General Kornilov during the first twenty-four hours of his Generalissimoship

managed to send me two ultimative telegrams, but I did not deal with them in the same way. I simply made a note of the first telegram. I did not report it to the Provisional Government, although it contained neither more nor less than the "terms" upon which General Kornilov eonsented to remain Generalissimo Here is the text of this ultimatum . "As a soldier bound to give an example of military discipline I obey the order of the Provisional Government appointing me to the post of General-issumo, but now as Generalissumo and a citizen of fice Russia I declare that I shall remain at this post only so long as I am conscious of being useful to my country and to the established regime. According to the above statement I declare that I accept this appointment upon the following (1) responsibility only before my conscience and before the whole people, (2) absolute non-interference with my military orders, including appointments to the high command, (3) extension of all measures lately adopted at the front to all districts in the rear where there are army reserves , (4) acceptance of my proposals stated in my tele-gram to the Generalissimo at the Conference of July 16th at the Stayka

To day, upon the buckground of the events which succeeded them, these "terms," drawn up by Zavoiko, produce a fu less naive impression than they did on the 20th of July, 1917 Then, if treated seriously, an official discussion of the ultimatum of General Kornilov, acting "now as Generalissimo," would have resulted in one inevitable consequence (see Clauses 1 and 2 of the terms)—General Kornilov's immediate dismissal from his post, with committal for tiral according to military statute. And yet the entire document give proof of such absence of even an elementary knowledge of statesmanship that it seemed impossible to reprove this gallant soldier, who clearly had signed a document foisted upon him by "chance persons." At that time I could have entirely shared Prince G. N. Trubetzkoy's later expressed opinion of General Kornilov.

"My general opinion of Kornilov," wrote Prince Trubetzkoy, "is, that he is above all a soldier unable to grasp complicated political matters, and as such he offers a particularly remarkable sample of our commanding staff." I recollect that, after reading the Generalissimo's terms, I handed over the telegram to Savinkov and Baranovsky. They both said it was unworthy of notice, and Savinkov added that this action showed that the General had been again influenced by the unscrupulous adventurers who surrounded him, and that, after receiving corresponding explanations, Kornilov would acknowledge his mistake.

If you bear in mind that those were times when "all and sundry" addressed nothing but "demands" to the Provisional Government, that the relation of a person demanding something to somebody of whom he demands it was the only accepted form of relation to the authorities; if you understand an attitude entirely comprehensible in the case of a people intoxicated with liberty after long years of slavery, whose imperious mode of address was adopted by a street meeting and the State Duma Conference, by the spokesman of the "revolutionary democraey" and the Central Committee of the Officers' League—if you bear all this in mind, you will understand why I considered General Kornilov's terms as mere literature. Added to that was the extraordinarily critical position at the front, which had to be dealt with with the utmost circumspection, and clamoured not for

"polities" but for military art, and I think that every impartial critic will understand why I could not deal with Kornilov's telegram otherwise than

by locking it up in my desk General Teheremissov's affait was quite another matter. This time I had to deal not with mere literature but with a very decisive act, which called for instant repudiation by the Supreme Authority. In his statement to the Commission of Inqury General Kornilov himself gives the following narrative of his "conflict," re Tehere missov, with the Provisional Government

"On the 10th of July I was appointed Generalissimo by order of the Provisional Government I telegraphed a reply, stating upon what terms I considered it possible to necept that post One of the terms was the absolute non interference of the Provisional Government in all appointments to the high commund — In reply I received a telegram from the Minister of War, recognizing my right to appoint my own collaborators, and the next day I learnt from the Press news that General Teheremissov had, without my knowledge, been appointed Communder in Chief of the South western front — I was obliged to telegraph to the Minister of War, asking him to cancel this appoint ment and warning him that otherwise I should find it impossible to accept the Supreme Command On the 20th of July I wired to Savinkov telling him that before receiving a decisive answer to my telegrams I would not start for the Staka."

In the first place, the simultaneous appoint ments of Generals Kornilov and Teheremissov by orders to the Senate were made on the 18th of July, ie before Kornilov presented his terms, and there fore my answer to General Kornilov's telegram of July 10th could have no connection with the events of July 18th Then my answer contained no assent to the terms of "non-interference", I only recognized General Kornilov's right as Generalissimo to make such appointments to the commanding staff as are within the jurisdiction of a Generalissimo; but this right had never been disputed. The fact is that the Statute concerning the rights of the Generalissimo, which had been drawn up for the Grand Duke Nicholai Nicholaevitch, gave the Generalissimo the right of appointment to commanding posts, subject to the presentation of the candidates for confirmation by the Supreme Authority This Statute remained in force after the Revolution, the power of the Sovereign being transferred to the Provisional Government. In practice, both before and after the Revolution the mutual relations between the Supreme Authority and the Stavka concerning appointments to the High Command consisted in each case in a prelimi-nary agreement I cannot recall a single instance of the Provisional Government appointing anyone to the army without previously consulting the Stavka, or of refusing the confirmation of an appointment made by the latter On the other hand, I must bear witness that neither General Alexeiev nor General Brussilov ever exercised their rights in cases of importance without first privately consulting the Premier or the Minister of War Naturally, General Kormiov's attempt to give such a wide interpretation of the Generalissimo's rights as to make him completely independent of the Government was doomed to failure. In Kormilov's time the Provisional Government made as much use as ever of its right of control and final confirmation of all appointments, decidedly interfering, when necessary, with the Stavka's activity. Thirdly, and that is the most important point,

56

General Kormlov, in spite of my telegram, continued to insist upon General Teheremissov's dismissal, and threatened to abandon his post in the middle of the enemy offensive. Having accepted the post of Generalissimo on the 19th of July, Kormlov arbitrarily delayed entering upon his duties for five days until the 24th of July. This was no longer literature, but a serious breach of military duty, which threatened the country with grave consequences.

I plead guilty for not having finally insisted upon Kornilov's immediate dismissal, but . . . but those were such terrible times, there was such sore need of a strong personality at the front Besides, General Teherenussov's remaining under the existing eneumstances at the post of Com-mander-in Chief of the South western front could only bring harm When judging this "conflict" one must bear in mind that General Teheremissov. commanding one of the corps of the 8th Army, had delivered a successful attack at Galitch and had added fresh laurels to General Kornilov's fame. At the time of my visit to the 8th Army, just before the Galitch offensive, General Kornilov spoke very highly of Teleremissov, and my per-sonal impression of the latter was that of a man capable of commanding troops in the novel postrevolutionary conditions In the opinion of every unprejudiced person General Teheremissov appeared as General Kornilov's most natural successor at the South western front And when, under pres-sure of the moment, I appointed them both on the 18th of July, I had no idea of creating a "conflict" Since then I received weekly ultimatums from General Konniov I here again repert that I struggled most decadedly against these ultimatums and against this manner of treating the

58

Provisional Government I struggled from first to last.

This struggle was all the more difficult because I could and would not use the favourite method of both the Right and Left parties-demagogy You have but to open the papers of that period to see the organized demagogic campaign led by the Stavka by means of special correspondents, interviews and declaration telegrams, which appeared in the Press before reaching the Premier's studyall of which produced an echo from the demagogues of the Left Observing the play of these passions, the Government tried by all means to calm the social atmosphere, to support the authority of the Stavka as the supreme military centre in the eyes of democracy, to keep General Kornilov within bounds in such a way as not to increase the differences in the army During those long weeks of struggle there was not a single instance of a hostile act done by any member of the Government agunst the Stavka On the contrary, when General Kornilov arrived at Petrograd on the 31d of August, I took the opportunity of fêting him at a meeting of the Provisional Government and of having the fact printed in all the papers Just before and during the Moscow Conference, as will be seen later, the Government took steps to prevent Kornilov from compromising himself The Govern ment's conflict with Kornilov assumed the shape of a passive resistance, the main point of it being the prevention of him and his adherents from taking one step beyond the limits drawn by the Provisional Government, so that all his attempts to use the Provisional Government as a means for the attrinment of his own ends proved a failure The Provisional Government executed the will of the whole people as expressed in the agreement between all the political parties which had delegated their representatives to the Provisional Government, and the only way of forcing it to deviate from such an all-national programme in the intcrests of one separate party was to overthrow it—an attempt which failed on the 27th of August and succeeded on the 25th of October l

§ 4

Chairman -Did Kornilov always address his demands for reform in the army and the rear to you personally, or through Savinkov, and were you always acquainted with them?

Kerenshy -No; and I must say that the most critical period was at the time of the possible prevention of the Moscow Conference (10th-11th of August), on the very eve of its meeting, when without my knowledge Kornilov was summoned to Petrograd Although he refused to come [owing to the grave situation at Rigal, the Ministry of War, that is Savinkov and Tilonenko, insisted upon his arrival When I heard of this insistence (about midnight on the eve of the Generalissimo's arrival at Petrograd) I sent the following telegram to Kornilov. "The Provisional Government has not summoned you, does not insist upon arrival. and will not be responsible for it in view of the strategie situation." In spite of that Kornilov arrived and presented me with a memorandum to be brought that evening before a meeting of the Provisional Government, supposed to have been jointly drawn up by the Minister of War and the Generalissimo But I had never seen at before it was shown to me by the Generalissumo Neither had Kornilov seen it before his nrrival at Petrograd, but he supposed I was acquainted with it Here he had sat on that little chair and I in this arm chair, and it seemed to me that I had succeeded in persuading him that, whatever opinion one might have of the memorandum itself, it was impossible to issue a document in the name of the Minister of Wai of whose contents I, then Minister of Wai, knew nothing [and that therefore, before I became thoroughly acquainted with it, it could not be discussed by the Provisional Government]

Kornilov agreed to this, took this document, and departed He returned, however, in the even ing in a totally changed frame of mind and declared that he was fully in accord with Savinkov and Filonenko and had already signed the memorandum

Chairman -Therefore this memorandum did not proceed from him, but was apparently written by Savinkov ?

Kerensky -It seems to have been drawn up by Pilonenko

[As will ultimately be seen, my deposition at this point refers to the so called second report of General Kornilov This document ought to have been brought before the Provisional Government instead of the first report of the Supreme Command which he proposed to by before the Government on August 3rd, but the reading of which was postponed until its contents were ap proved by the Minister of War. Thus the very origin of this second report proves that, even if I did not entirely agree with all it contained, my knowledge of its essential contents was an indispensable preliminary condition of its being laid before the Provisional Government From General Kornilov's deposition it is evident that his decision to sign the report of Savinkov and Tilonenko," at 6 p.m. on August 10th, was brought about by Savinkov's declaring that although "the memorandum had not actually been laid before A. F. Kerensky for his final revision," he had reported to him (Kerensky) "bit by bit in the course of its preparation, and that in any case the contents of the report were known to the Prime Minister." In reality I was only informed of the first clause relating to "the introduction of military courtsmartial at the rear." However, Savinkov in his deposition changes the definite word "contents" into the vague term "substance of." "This memorandum," says Savinkov, "apart from the drafts of bills on Committees and Commissaries, contains other projected measures: (1) The establishment of revolutionary courts-martial at the rear; (2) the restoration of disciplinary powers to commanding officers; (3) the militarization of the railways; (4) the militarization of such factories as were working for the defence. A. F. Kerensky was kept informed by me to some extent of the preparation of such a report by the War Office, since on several occasions I laid before him the substance of it, emphasizing more especially the bill of the military-revolutionary courts-martial by which it acquired a decisive importance. Kerensky did not express his views as to the measures proposed by me until August 8th, when at the Ministry of War he declared to me categorically that in no case, and under no conceivable circumstances, would he sign such a document. After this declaration of his, I said that in that case the report to the Provisional Government would be presented by General Kornilov and I sent in my resignation."

This deposition depicts in sufficiently high colours the relations between the Deputy-Minister of War and the Wai Minister, but an indispensable commentary on Savinkov's crutious words will commentary on Savinkov's crutious worth win be found in the conversation by telegraph between Filonenko and the Commissary of the South western front, Gobetchia, on August 27th "You know our rule," said Filonenko, "to aet always with the cognizance not only of our allies, but of our real, or presumed, enemies as well Therefore we have informed the Prime Minister betimes of the fact that I am writing a report, that Boris Victorovitch 1 is in constant touch with me, and Victorovitch ' is in constant touch with me, and that General Kornilov fully shares our views on the state of things. The Premier did not find it possible to lay such a report before the Provisional Government for consideration. We then warned him that it would be presented to the Provisional Government all the same by one who had the right to do so, that is to say, by the Commander in Chief. Unfortunately the Premier and the first had oning the Fremei of action we adopted I, bidding good byc (Filonenko had to proceed to Headquarters on the evening of August 10th), assured Savinkov that in this extraordinary political conflict he had, of course, a right to the support of his adherents."

Thus, on account of a political quarrel, it was considered possible to command the presence of General Kornilov in spite of the fact that "the changes in the strategic situation demanded his presence at Headquarters,' as, according to Savin kov, Kornilov had declared to him in person, on August 9th, by telegram (These were the critical days of Riga)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pamiliar appellation of Savinkov according to the Russian custom of calling a person by his prenomen plus his father s prenomen

Savinkov, fully realizing how serious was his action, assured General Kornilov, according to the statement of the latter, that "the summons to Petrograd was made with the knowledge of the Provisional Government." In his own deposition Savinkov speaks as follows: "I summoned General Kornilov to Petrograd in the full conviction that I was acting entirely in agreement with Kerensky, for: (1) on August 3rd, General Kornilov notified me that he was coming to Petrograd for the discussion of the menorandum, and his declaration had met with no objection on Kerensky's part; (2) on August 7th, General Kornilov telegraphed to Kerensky and received no objection; (8) on August 8th, I referred the matter to Kerensky and encountered no opposition. The fact of Kerensky's having sent a telegram to Kornilov on the 9th, intimating that his journey to Petrograd was unnecessary, which did not find the General at Headquarters, was not known to me." While so precisely demonstrating that on August 3rd, 7th and 8th he had good grounds for his conviction that he was acting in complete agreement with me, Savinkov has forgotten that he himself was informed only on August 9th of General Kornilov's refusal to come to Petrograd; while as to Savinkov's being ignorant of my telegram sent to catch General Kornilov, the matter is easily explained: it was sent late in the evening, after I had accidentally learnt of the unauthorized and repeated invitation to Kornilov, which, it is to be regretted, I did not learn from Savinkov personally.]

Raupakh.—This was on August 10th?

Kerensky.—All this took place on August 10th, and carly on August 11th Kokoshkin came to me with the intimation that he would resign at once if General Kornilov's programme was not accepted that day. The tension was great, but I succeeded in smoothing things over.

[It is only necessary to remember the exceptional tension of political passion under pressure of which the Moscow Conference met and was inaugurated, in order to realize what a sense of bewilderment came over me on Kokoshkin's appearance with his resignation—for I was in the very centre of this area of tension. This matutinal interview with Kokoshkin was one of the stormiest of my political encounters. But to-day I rejoice to remember encounters. But to-day I rejoice to remember the passionate flame of love for his country which he felt in the depths of his soul; a love which so soon consumed him on the martyr's pyre; a love which then made it possible for us, in fine, to speak independently of party, and above all party feeling, the fraternal language of the sons of one mother-Russia.

The departure of one group of Ministers from the Provisional Government on necount of Ko-koshkin would probably have been followed by the resignation of the remaining Ministers on the eve of the opening of the Conference for the same reason as in the case of Kokoshkin—the "demands" of Kornilov. This would have made any further preservation of national equilibrium an impossibility. The Government, however, was only too well aware of the state of the country only too well aware of the state of the country to risk a disastrous attempt at government by a "homogeneous" Cabinet, and was compelled to put aside any subject of which the "Bolsheviks from the Right" imght take advantage for an attempt (which was being prepared for the Moscow Conference) to create a so-called "strong authority" and in any case to deviate the course of the Government towards the Right. Of course, such an attempt could only have brought to cruel shame those who took part in it. Its danger might only have lain in the fact that it would have thrown towards the Left the leaders of democratic circles which at this juneture were following sincerely and honourably in the steps of the Government I think the Moscow Conference proved that the hypothesis that the masses of the nation might at that time have been detached from the Provisional Government in order to follow a course more to the Right was a harmful Utopianism, because such dieums, impotent to bring forth results, were only effective in producing irritation in the masses and increasing their dis trust of the classes At that time, at the Moscow Conference, the Utopians of the Right were shown their proper place without serious trouble, but no lessons of facts and realities could disillusion them, and they continued to clamour just enough to become a convenient weapon in the hands of the demagogues of the Left to rouse the wild beast in the masses, who in the end has broken his cage and run amok

See note on p. 118.

Later, after the Moscow Conference, I spoke to Savmkov and persuaded him not to resign When it seemed that at Moscow everybody realized elearly that it was impossible to attack the Provisional Government on this ground, I decided that it was not worth while to follow up any further all the consequences of this episode of the memorandum and summons to Kormlov

Of course this decision may appear to have been wrong, but I did not perceive in Savinkov's doings any cvil design, and only saw in them an extreme manifestation of his militant temperament But in any case his resignation would not have averted Kornilov's proceedings, because I am convinced that the events of August 27th-20th had been prepared behind Savinkov's back. I think it will be evident to the reader later that this deduction was correct !

§ 5.

Chairman—Were reports made to you by Filonenko concerning the conspiracy at Headquarters, and on what were they based? Especially as regards Lukonaky and Tikhinenev?

Kerensky—I read in the newspapers that certain witnesses attach some great importance to the alleged "fact" that I was informed of a plot almost under the direction of Lukamsky, and matter of fact, the affine was quite otherwise. There was some talk of Lukomsky, but under the following circumstances A day or two after Tilonenko was elected Commissary to the Supreme Command, Savinkov told me that Tilonenko had "discovered" something, and that he insisted an the immediate dismissal of Lukomsky. I replied by asking how he had learnt it, seeing he had only just arrived it Hendquarters. Then Filonenko eame here and said to me. "I do not trust General Lukomsky and I insist on his immediate dismissal" I answered that I could not do this because it was quite impossible to dismiss the Chief of the Stall of the Generalismus without any grounds or information, that my position would be ridiculous, and it would be said that this was autocracy in its most inadmissible form-to dismiss one man for who knows what one day, and another one the next So far, General Lukomsky had carried out his duties conscientiously, and there was nothing against him. "If you bring me positive information, that will be another matter," I said.

Chairman .- And he produced no facts?

Kerensky.—He produced none; he only said:
"I declare that I utterly distrust Lukomsky and insist on his immediate dismissal." M. I. Terestehenko, who was at Headquarters at that time, came and told me that the feeling there was extremely serious because Filonenko led a most persistent campaign against Lukomsky. After this I received no further communications regarding Lukomsky except that information reached me that the people there managed to get on together better than before.

Chairman .- In connection with this indication by Filonenko of the lack of any data which would eonfirm his desire to see Lukomsky dismissed, did you not explain to Filonenko that as Commissary to the Supreme Command he ought to maintain good relations with the Chief of the Staff?

Kerensky. - I spoke thus: I consider, generally speaking, that such behaviour was undesirable, and that without sufficient grounds such assertions should never be made to me. Also I insisted that the relations between himself, as the Commissary attached to the Commander-in-Chief, and the Chief of the Staff should be correct.

Chairman .- And did you say that in the meantime you did not suspect Lukomsky of being a counter-revolutionary?

Kerensky.-Yes. Because there was no sort of evidence to that effect. [General Lukomsky's appointment to the post of Chief of the Staff was made at the same time as that of General Brussilov (who became Commander-in-Chief). Comparatively young, energetic, very intelligent, an accomplished specialist, with great experience in administrative and military matters, General Luk-omsky carried out his duties as Cluef of the Staff during an extremely difficult phase of the war in an exemplary way, understanding how to limit tactfully the circle of his duties and never mixing tactfully the circle of his duties and never infalling himself up in polities. Therefore what afterwards happened—the union between Lukomsky and General Kormlov—was incomprehensible to me. Now that I am acquainted in detail with all that took place at Headquarters previous to August 27th, and that the rôle played there by Filonenko humself became clear to me, I understand why Lukomsky at the last moment proved to be at one with Kornilov. But then, at the close of July, the campaign against Lukomsky could be explained as heing (as it seems in fact to have been) merely an effort to rid Headquarters of n man who was distrusted. Here is a characteristic passage from a statement of Prince Trubetzkoy which confirms my conjectures: "I must say that as early as August 24th, having called on Lukonisky after a discussion with General Kornilov, I pointed out to the former the people who surrounded Kornilov, enlarging upon the possible harm to him from their influence. Lukomsky, agreeing with me en-tirely on this point, remarked that he had been kept altogether out of the recent political dissept altogether out of the recent political dis-cussions... and that he had raised the question as to whether he possessed Kornilov's confidence-or no, after which he was informed in a general way of the political movements." Elsewhere Trubetzkoy relates how, on August 27th, Lukom-sky, in his presence, asked Kornilov "to make it possible for them to converse in private, if only for a few minutes"

I do not think that the effort to get rid of Lukomsky in July was made without Kornilov being aware of it, because his wish to change the Chief of the Staff was known to me, and it was only at the Moseow Conference that Kornilov told me that he had come to an agreement with Lukomsky.]

Chanman.—More particularly, sir, as regards Tikhmenev, was not his dismissal demanded on similar grounds, namely that he was something like the head of the plot, and had not the prejudice against him some foundation?

Kerensky -I must confess that the meident relating to Tikhmenev passed before me as in a dream I heard that n telegram had been sent to summon Tikhmenev to the Ministry of War, that when on his way thither he was sent back again, and that all this was done on account of that telegram from Filonenko to Savinkov, a phrase of which was found later in a note-book in the possession of Kormlov when he was arrested-about "the pale horse" 1 This story did not reach me officially. All this fuss was grounded on the fact that almost immediately after his arrival at Headquarters Filonenko sent Savinkov a code telegram to the effect that Tikhmenev was leading troops ("the pale horse") against Kormlov ("Myrta"). Afterwards Filonenko explained this telegram by the fact that just at this time the Third Aimy Corps was moved from the South to Headquarters

Chairman—Did not Colonel Baranovsky then specially vouch for Tikhmenev, saying that so fair no kind of suspicion and been aroused by him, and did not that serve to rehabilitate Tikhmenev?

Kerensky — There was some conversation on Lukomsky's account, but the story about Tikhmenev did not reach me Someone just mentioned that a curious telegram was received which had very mysterious contents Perhaps I am 'The Pale Horse' is a well known novel by B V Savinkov.

confusing matters, but it seems to me this was how it stood. [General Tikhinenev was the Chief of the Military Transport at Headquarters, consequently orders for the transport of troops were Tikhmence could only give such directions after having received corresponding orders from the Staff. Consequently, the duties of Chief of the Military Transport were purely technical and administrative. The case of General Tiklimenev is quite immportant, almost farcical: it was touched upon by the Commission of Inquiry evidently in connection with that version of it which was so persistently expounded by Filonenko and a few others: there was a plot, but all the threads of it centred in the Staff, and Kerensky, being reassured by Baranovsky, closed his eyes to this . . . In reality the misunderstanding with Tiklimenev happened because, at the time of General Kormlov's arrival at Headquarters, the Third Army corps also went there, having been summoned after the events of July 3rd-5th to station itself in the region of Headquarters The fact was that, having received false intelligence of the victory of the. Bolsheviks in Petrograd, their comrades of the Soviet of Mohilev (where the Headquarters were) tried to achieve a similar result at Headquarters, and appeared before General Brussilov with a proposal to recognize them as Authority. In a discussion on this subject it came out that Headquarters were, in reality, completely without pro-tection against such insolence. Now, to create, even temporarily, entanglements in the working at Headquarters would be a very attractive plan, and not only for Russian Bolsheviks. Therefore we, with Brussilov, decided to strengthen the defences at Headquarters. This is all ]

ξ G.

Chairman.—Then, what about Kornilov's arrival on August 8rd, its reason, aims, and all that took place here? Both Kornilov and Savinkov express themselves explicitly on this subject.

Kerensky .- On the 3rd of August, Kornilov arrived in order to . . .

Raupakh.—To report on the strategical situation . . .

Kerensky.-Yes, yes. . . .

Chairman.—They refer to a memorandum which Savinkov wrote to Kornilov and transmitted through the Minister Terestchenko. In this connection Kornilov makes an extended deposition; he says in it that then a complete change came about in his ideas...

Kerensky.-In his deposition he states what I said. Please do not repeat it all here.

Chairman.—Yes, and Savinkov gave him a note. . . Was Kornilov summoned by the Government, or did he come, as on August 10th, on the invitation of Savinkov?

Kerensky.—I cannot say on whose initiative it was—whether the Government summoned him, or whether he expressed a desire to present a report. We usually observed the following procedure: the Commander-in-Chief used to come in order personally to review generally the military situation and to confer with the Provisional Government upon the essential questions relating to the front. In any case Kornilov's coming on August 3rd was quite straightforward. On whose initiative he came is of no importance. He arrived, and on the same day a special sitting of the Provisional Government was called, at which Kornilov produced a report. That report had the following matecedents. Kornilov brought with him a memorandum (which was certainly not written by him personally, but by somebody at Headquarters) of such a nature that I considered it impossible to read it out before the Provisional Government. It set forth a whole series of measures, the greater part of which were quite acceptable, but formulated in such a way and supported by such arguments that the announcement of them would have led to quite opposite results. At any rate, there would have been an outburst, and after making the memorandum public it would have been impossible to retain Kornilov as Commander-in-Chief. I then requested the Deputy Minister for War sn to arrange matters that this report should not be rend before the Provisional Government. It was resolved that the memorandum should be was resolved that the memorandum should be revised in conjunction with the Minister for War (i.e. myself), to make it acceptable to Headquarters, to public opinion, and to me; and that on that particular day General Kormilov should only report upon the strategic situation of the army and upon possible military events. By the way, I. do not know whether you are aware that in the second memorandum presented on August 10th there appeared two entirely new clauses relating to factories and ways of communication.

Chairman.—Which did not figure in the report of August 3rd?

of August 3rd?

Kerensky.—No Both these clauses were very like a production by n Stehedrin official. They were not, as it appears, known to Kornilov before he came to Petrograd on August 10th. On that day, we—that is to say, Nekrassov, Terestehenko and myself—insistently asked Kornilov at any rate not to touch upon these clauses at the Moscow Conference At the same time we said that if he made these clauses public, there would samply be a great seandal. As a matter of fact, if anyone had desired the downfall of Kornlov at the Moscow Conference, it would only have been necessary to let him read his report in public, and especially the two clauses dealing with factories and ways of communication. Then all would have been at an end

Stelledrin, a famous Russian saturet

I well remember how Nekrassov and Terestchenko, with the greatest tenderness for the General's feelings, tried their utmost to bring things home to him; and, pointing to their own experiences in the Duma, in the War Industries Committee, and other public organizations, endeavoured to make it clear to him that all his proposed measures for the regeneration of the rear—the militarization of the railways and factorics-had already been brought forward by the Ministers of the old regime, and were even then rejected, not only by public opinion, but even by official experts, that it was impossible, for instance, to condemn an engineer to death for some technical error, or to attach the workers to their factories under the threat of repressive measures. and so on; how for General Kornilov to come forward with such projects borrowed from the archives of bureaueracy would hardly increase his authority, and so on But all in vain. The general, much too simple in matters of state-administration and economics, who, without bothering about thinking it out, had signed this school-boy ish composition in the style of Ugium-Burtcheev, would not believe a word of what the two Ministers said, and was convinced that the A character in "History of a Town," by Stehedrin

Provisional Government, on some pretext or other, did not wish all Russia to know of his new programme for the country's salvation. Moreover, General Kornilov was so persuaded of the unique importance of this report, that in his speech at the Moscow Conference he even attributed the authorship of it to himself ("My report was presented to the Provisional Government, and this document was signed without any hesitation by the Deputy Minister for War, Savinkov, and the Commissary attached to the Supreme Command, Filonenko").

On August 3rd all was carried out as decided. At the sitting of the Provisional Government General Kornilov made a report on the strategical situation, stating that he would report on the pro-posed measures for the regeneration of the army during his next visit. As regards the deposition of Kornilov concerning a note received by him from Savinkov during the sitting of August 3rd, I do not know what Savinkov wrote to General Kornilov. I do not wish at present to decide whether Kornilov interpreted sincerely or not my words in regard to this document, but the conversation we . had with him was on a quite different subject. He reported, at great length, on the question of the proposed offensive operations on the Southwestern front, and on a whole series of other measures, and afterwards he began to talk of various technical matters in detail. Then I turned to him and said, "General, these details are not at all necessary here." That is all.

Chairman .- . . . Thus, the general strategical situation was sketched out?

Kerensky.—More than that; he even spoke, as I have said already, about the preparations made for an ollensive on the South-western front. Only after I perceived that all that was essential had been reported, I said to the General that these details were unnecessary here. It should be stated—and members of the Provisional Government can confirm this—that I always endeavoured to keep the sittings of the Provisional Government as brief as possible, and used to cut short even Ministers ruthlessly when once I saw that the essence of the matter had been laid before us. . . .

Krokhmal.—There was not in it a thought of the necessity of secreey?

Kerensky.—I had no such thought. Simply, if it had happened to be a member of the Provisional Government or an intimate friend, I should have said: "Ivan Ivanovitch, enough. The matter is now clear." I did not wish to . . .

Krokhmal.-Offend him?

Kerensky.—To place him in an awkward position, and I said: "General, these details are quite unnecessary here."

Chairman.—But what was in Savinkov's note?

Kerensky.—I do not know. It was addressed to .Kornilov.

Chairman.—Yes, the note eame to Kornilov from Savinkov, and in his deposition he now insists upon this note.

Kerensky.—I think it likely that this happened afterwards, and that it was not a note, but a verbal communication. I sat beside Kornilov and should have noticed if a document had been handed over to him. Even if this had been done behind my back I should have seen Kornilov stretch out his hand.

Chairman. -This episode is not within your recollection?

Kerensky.-I do not remember it.

[In order to form a clear judgment as to which note it was that the Commission of Inquiry was so anxious to be enlightened upon, and why, I will quote the depositions on that subject of Kornilov and Savinkov which are known to me Kornilov and Savinkor which are known to the Speaking of the sitting of the Provisional Government on August 3rd, General Kornilov added "I consider it my duty to observe that when I touched upon the question, which is the front where it might be possible to carry out an attack under certain conditions, the Prime Minister, who was sitting beside me, turned round and warned me in a whisper that this question must be handled erreumspectly Shortly afterwards Savinkov's note was handed in to me with a similar warning I was filled with consternation and indignation, that in the Council of the Ministers of Russin the Commander in Chief could not, without risk, touch upon questions about which he deemed it necessary, in the interests of the defence of the necessary, in the interests of the defence of the country, to keep the Government informed I But at the close of the sitting it became evident to me, from a few words spoken by Savinkov, that the warning concerned the Minister ——" About, this same episode Savinkov says "During the sitting of the Provisional Government I sent Kerensky a note containing approximately the following 'Does the Prime Minister feel sure that the communication by Govern Kernels. following 'Does the Prime Minister feel sure that the communication by General Kornilov of the secrets of our Government and its Allies will not become known through "comrades" to our enemies?' Moreover, at the close of the sitting I said to General Kornilov that un fortunately I was not certain that all which was said in the sittings of the Provisional Government was kept secret. Of course, I had no intention of custing suspicion on any of the Ministers as having relations with the enemy, but I knew that some members of the Government were in frequent and friendly communication with members of the Soviet, among whom, according to information from the Intelligence Department, were persons suspected of inter-course with the enemy. Besides which I knew that an officer of the Austrian army (Otto Bauer) had been invited to attend a meeting of the Soviet." From these two depositions it would appear that Kornilov did not receive a note from Savinkov, and that I did receive such a note from the latter. which note I immediately tore up (I remember so much). Savinkov was very cautious, being as he was in close touch with the Military Intelligence Department and studying all the reports of the Secret Scrvice. Thus, in another part of his deposition he says: "Zavoiko was suspected of taking part in the plot, and, at the same time, my attention was drawn to him by the Intelli-gence Department, on account of his excellent relations with a Mr. Kurtz, who had been exiled to Ribinsk on suspicion of being a German spv."

Such is the history of the note at the sitting of August 3rd. The reason why the Commission of Inquiry became interested in this story and why I am now telling it in detail, is that it furnished General Kornilov with grounds which he deemed sufficient for an infamous statement—that "the Provisional Government... is acting in complete agreement with the plans of the German General Staff." This accusation appears in his famous first manifesto "to the Russian people," which, by the way, was the work of the friend of Mr. Kurtz—Mr. Zavoiko.]

$ 7.

Chairman .- Did not the General, then Colonel, Baranovsky visit Headquarters on August 3rd-4th? For what reason was this journey undertaken? We wish to receive evidence as to when more definite reports began to come in regarding the possible plot at Headquarters.

Kerensky. -This is an old story. Long before Baranovsky's journey.

Chairman. - Earlier than August 3rd-4th? Kerensky. - You know that nt the Moscow Conference an attempt was made . . .

Chairman. - This was later . . . but on August

3rd-4th?

Kerensky.-Why did Baranovsky visit Headquarters? Perhaps at that time arose the question of proclaiming the establishment martial law in connection with the events.

Krokhmal.-No: Riga was taken after the Moscow Conference. Raupakh.-Baranovsky went on August 23rd?

Kerensky.-Yes; he went there when it was necessary to decide the question of separating . . . Liber .- This is a different visit; it was no doubt in connection with the separation of the territory of Petrograd. . . .

Chairman. - This was when he went with Sav-inkov, on August 23rd-24th; but on the 2rd-4th he went there on account of the peculiar relations which had already existed between Headquarters and the Provisional Government. The question of superseding the Commander-in-Chief had not yet arisen? Krokhmal.-Why, Kornilov was here on August

3rd. I must remind you that Baranovsky's journey was after this.

Ukraintsev.—Colonel Baranovsky was to have gone to Kiev to see his sick mother (or was it his father?), and stopped at Headquarters on the way.

Kerensky .- Yes. He went to Kiev to his father, who was ill. I wish to be accurate, and I am afraid of stating positively whether I asked him to go to Headquarters, or whether he went of his own accord. Let us assume that it was I who asked Baranovsky to go there. The question of the moment might have been to make clear what was the position of the League of Officers. I must say that from July 3rd-5th the League of Officers had taken up a somewhat aggressive attitude towards the Provisional Government and was addressing to the latter telegrams in the spirit of the "Bolshevism from the Right": "We ask this," "we demand that," "we protest," etc. When I came to Headquarters, Novosiltsev always met me with a good deal of opposition. There may often be something in the attitude of people -especially in political and social matters which one feels clearly, although one may not be able -to produce any documentary justification for the conclusions one draws from it. The tension in the atmosphere at Headquarters, especially among the Main Committee of the League of Officers, had long been felt; and a month, or perhaps more, before all these events-about the end of July-I received precise information of a plot which was being prepared among the officers and had its centres in Petrograd and at Headquarters.

Chairman. -At the end of July?

Kerensky .- Ycs, perhaps even earlier; it can be verified in this way: when was the law passed permitting extra-judicial arrests and exiling abroad?

90

Liber. - I believe, on July 9th.

Kerensky.-No, later. A week or two before this law was promulgated, I was thinking out the way to organize the struggle against the plotters. Ultimately, the legal measure which, as early as the month of April, I, as Minister of Justice, had brought in for formal purposes, now became necessary in practice. Of course I kept the Provisional Government informed of this new phenomenon, Government informed of this new pheaomenon, the "plots wave." At this time occurred the arrests of the Grand Dukes, but it appeared that we were purposely put on the wrong track. Baraavovsky went to Headquarters in order to investigate the state of mind of the people there, and to throw some light upon what they were doing there at the League of Officers. Another time, after going there with Savinkov, he said to me among other thiags on his return: "The atmosphere at Headquarters is desperate just now; they, absolutely can not stand you."

[I consider it necessary to emphasize sharply the fact that Colonel Baranovsky's journey to Headquarters was not and could not have been

Headquarters was not and could not have been in any way connected with questions of political investigation. The plotting at the League of Officers was a sort of smugglers' business, and the investigation of that matter was being done separately. From the midst of the Main Committee of the League of Officers were recruited the active conspirators; its members in various places were also the agents of the conspiracy on the spot; on the other hand, they also determined the character of the legal declarations or actions of the League. Now, Colonel Baranovsky was interested in the League of Officers precisely as in a legitimate social organization—an organization of which the object was exceedingly useful tion of which the object was exceedings useful and necessary—although in the activities of its Main Committee features were appearing which became more and more disquieting to me both as Prime Minister and Minister of War. In its concep-Prime Minister and Minister of War. In its conception and rules, the League of Officers was a professional, non-party organization. "The League of Officers of the Army and Navy" (it is stated on the first page of its statutes) "is a professional union. . . . It has no political platform, and pursues no political aims. Every member of the League has a full right freely to form his political views. Members bind themselves not to earry political intolerance into their professional relations and the everyday life of the Army and tions and the everyday life of the Army and Navy." This is an entirely correct definition of the character of every professional Union. Of course, it would be absurd to expect a completely non-political attitude from any professional association in Russia during the summer of 1917, but a professional Union, and still more its administrators, never should or could behave like a militant and "intolerant" political body. Now, militant and intolerant pointed body. Now, the Main Committee of the League of Officers violated this ABC of a professional organization, and also its own rules, in a radical manner. It is true that on July 25th of the previous year the "Messenger of the Main Committee of the League of Officers of the Army and Navy" con-cluded its leading article as follows: "In this article we reply to past and future accusations against the League attributing to it political activities, in order that we may point out to those who wish to implicate us in politics that the League refuses to go that way. Its mission is far wider, its activities more useful, for it aims at far wider, its activities more useful, for it aims at making it possible for every officer of the Russian revolutionary Army and Navy to fulfil his duties under the most favourable conditions, in the firm belief that the League will afford him full and organized support in his efforts to promote the interests and greatness of his native land." But, in its conception of "the most favourable con-ditions" under which officers can "fulfil their duty" the Main Committee introduced an entire odity the Main Committee introduced at characteristical programme, and, in the name of the whole body of officers, made very definite and sharp demands, and put forward trenchant political declarations. In order to be convinced how peculiarly the Main Committee understood its own "professionalism," it is sufficient to glance at a few numbers of its "Messenger," and to bear in mind that the Main Committee, far from assuming a neutral attitude, would often adopt a rather "intolerant" one towards even the Provisional Government itself

Retter than anyone clse, I, as Mmster of War, together with my close collaborators, knew and understood all the horror, moral, professional and political, of the officers' situation, better than any others we realized that the officers of the Russian army, who, after the Revolution, were becoming the "scape goats" for the sins of others, could not keep outside politics. Less than anybody else could we be surprised by, let alone indignant at, the opposition, however sharp, on the part of the officers, who, not knowing all the complexity of the new political conditions in the life of the country, might justifiably, and quite naturally, not only complain of, but be indignant at, the Government. They did not know that strange, powerful pressure of elements let loose

by revolution in the mass of the people, and particularly in the masses of soldiers—a pressure which strained to the utmost the whole organism of the State They did not grasp the reasons for the apparent slowness with which Government exercised a cooling influence on these elements, nor realize that any imprudent measure might only enable these elements to break out aftesh and sweep everybody before them, and first of all the officers and, with them, the entire Russian army

In the fiery atmosphere of revolution, as in the tornd desert, many saw mirages before them, and in their efforts to reach them, they unhappily brought disaster-not only on themselves That the Main Committee of the League of Officers should run after a mirage was dangerous, because the Committee spoke in the name of the whole personnel of the officers, calling itself "the repre-sentative" of "the corps of officers," pretending that its own political creed was the cult of all the officers, and setting its scal upon the entire cor-poration This was too risky a game. It was like playing with fire on the edge of the powder magazine And if we take into consideration that the Main Committee of the League was located at Headquarters, rehed in its work on the cooperation of officials upon the staff at the fronts and in the various armies, nominated its own and in the various armies, nominated its own confidential representatives, kept a black list of officers who differed from its political views, set up its own commissions of inquiry, expressed its approbation or disapproval, etc., if, as I say, we take all these facts into consideration, it will, on the one hand, be evident why the proceedings of the Main Committee of the League assumed a "highly officious" character, and, on the other hand, why the responsibility for the actions not even of the whole League, but only of its Main Committee, was attached to all the Russian officers jointly and individually.

I will eite a clear example of the embarrassing relations between the military powers and the Main Committee which prevailed last summer and required the intervention of the Ministry of War. Savinkov then telegraphed to Kornilov as follows: "Your instructions obliging the staffs to provide the Main Committee of the League with lists of Bolshevik officers may lead to most undesirable misunderstandings, because these orders will result in setting up a certain control by the Main Committee over the party organizations and activities of the officers, which con-Committee; the right of such a control can only belong to the Commissaries and to competent tribunals. In view of the above considerations, I would suggest the desirability of cancelling your instructions." Again, the staffs used to circulate certain militant resolutions of the Committee, which circumstance was understood as an official approval of the course steered by the Committee and served to increase the tension already existing in the relations between the officers of the army and the rank and file, etc.

I considered this position quite abnormal, unpermissible, pregnant with serious consequences. By way of example I will point to the alarm aroused by the activity of the League among the naval officers, on whom the least fluctuation in the political temperature of the men reacted painfully. "In view of the strong agitation in both flects against the officers, due to the activities of the League, I beg you to bring to the knowledge of the fleets that there is information to the effect that the officers of the Baltic Fleet never had representatives in the Main Committee of the League at Headquarters, and that the Black Sea Fleet recalled theirs." Thus the Chief of the Naval Staff of the Commander-in-Chief telegraphed to me at the beginning of August.

Considering, however, that the root-idea of the League was healthy and useful, I and my collaborators, especially General Baranovsky, desired to clear up the general position, by an exchange of views, by pointing out the possible results of such a course, and thereby to restrain the Main Committee from tendencies which were psychologically intelligible, but dangerous for the personnel of the officers as a whole, and, what was even more important, fatal to the whole army. I remember having issued instructions that Colonel Pronin, a representative of the Main Committee, should be requested to come to me personally for a discussion of the matter, but, unhappily, for some reason the discussion never took place.

At the end of July, information began to come in pointing to the participation of an influential section of the Main Committee (especially of the staff officers) in an organized conspiracy, and the question of the ultimate fate of the Committee became still more acute. It was urgently necessary to find some issue before it was too late. Unfortunately, the leaders of the Committee, and among them a former member of the Fourth Impernal Duma—Colonel Novossiltsev (Constitutional Democrat)—persisted in their dangerous game, and after the Moscow Conference I resolved to have the Main Committee removed from Headquarters. . . . The nightmare through which we are living to-day has fully confirmed our fears, having shown how cruelly the whole body of officers suffered for the proceedings of a separate and unimportant group of fantastic and insane gamblers. And yet, as I said in my manifesto of August 22nd, "the flower of the army—the personnel of its officers-had gone through a great bloodless revolution in brotherly unity with their men, strengthening the work of those who had struck off the shameful fetters of slavery The officers had shown that they were of one flesh with the people. The first days of joy passed; a hard task was keeping every man at his post, and preventing him from throwing down his arms, so that the foe should not snatch away his newly found freedom. The officers remained at their posts, the better part of them, in spite of all calumnies, having faith in the common sense of the people, displaying the loftiest heroism, in some units the casualties included almost all the officers The officers, as a body, gave their blood on the battlefield, and proved their faith in their country and the Revolution . . History will do honour to these heroes"]

Chairman—What was the particular information regarding the extent of this plot, the individuals—or perhaps the organizations—which might be implicated in it? Perhaps there was merely general information that something was being hatched?

Kerensky—There was not merely information that something was being hatched, but concrete data You are aware of our position at present Without actual means of investigation, we are like blind puppies We may be tricked on all sides and yet notice nothing Generally speaking, a whole pile of information was amassed, and even before the Moscow Conference I expected that some developments were inevitable. This information came in at the end of July and the very heginning of August.

Chairman.—Was it a military conspiracy?

Kerensky.—The position was, that the people about whom we received information were all in the army, but they had relations with some civil elements; they had abundant resources. Quite a series of newspapers appeared—some of them are flourishing to this day—which started to attack the Provisional Government, and myself personally. They were all organs of the partisans of "a strong rule": the "Jivoe Slovo," "Narodnaya Gazetta," "Novaya Russ," "Vitchernce Vremya," etc. I cannot, naturally, furnish at this moment proofs satisfactory for inquiry purposes, but to me the whole plan is elear.

Chairman .- The creating of a suitable public opinion in ecrtain circles, by means of a propaganda in the Press?

Kerensky .- Yes.

Chairman.—But were there any indications as to the immediate object in view?

Kerensky .- To seize the power and arrest the Provisional Government. A typical counter-revolu-tion was being prepared; not a mass movement, but a coup d'état.

Chairman .- On what could "they" rely?

Kerensky.—"They" had links with Headquarters.
At that time no special indications pointed to Kornilov, but there was some talk of the part Kornilov, but there was some talk of the part played by the staff officers. The first source of information was perfectly trustworthy. It was not received through agents, not being denunciatory information, so to speak; but it eams from people of the highest reliability, who were honestly and seriously anxious that I should look betimes into possible occurrences Later on, information was received through less trustworthy sources, but it completely coincided with the first intimations. Then we began to take our own observations as far as lay within our means. Naturally this was very difficult to do, for the general feeling at Head-quarters was so strained that every person who came there from the Centre awakened irritation and suspicion.

[As regards the plot, it is necessary to make a few general remarks. Where did the wave of conspiracy originate? There can be but one reply it originated at Tarnopol, and on July 3rd-4th in Petrograd The débâcle at the front had created a feeling of wounded national pride which lent itself easily to methods of conspiracy, and the Bolshevik insurrection had revealed to the un informed how far reaching was the inner dis-solution of the democracy, the impotence of the Revolution against anarchy, and the power of the minority if competently organized and acting unexpectedly The fact that only a handful of Cossacks and a few soldiers who had not yet lost discipline had saved the Taurida Palace (that is was duly noted by those who were interested in such things. A further series of mistakes, and more particularly an absurd terror, amounting almost to panie, of a coming counter revolution, which after the 3rd-5th of July positively became the fushionable disease of the democracy, gave the circles from which the future adventurers originated the impression that the democracy was afraid because it felt its weakness

Now began a tragic misunderstanding one side lost faith in its strength, which was real while the other, hearing its power talked about, believed in this myth The former, panie stricken on account of a coming counter revolution, grew demoralized and thereby contributed towards 1c-establishing in the masses the anarchical Bolshevik influences, the other side became bolder and bolder in its the other side became bolder and bolder in its attacks on the "ievolutionary democracy," and so irritated the people, to the gieat joy of the unruly elements Besides, among eucles adhering to the "Right" it was supposed that popular discontent was to then advantage, consequently they considered it a good thing to inflame the prissions of the misses Sec, for example, how Suvorin's "Narodnaya Gazetta" sang to the tune of Messrs Bronstein Trotzky and Co. "In the very first days when in the streets of Petrogial appeared the solemn pheard, 'Long live the Democratic Republic!' we said that this kind of political emasculation will not succeed in Russia, for here only a great People's Republic can be established only a great People's Republic can be established on a new social order—a great Social Republic" And here is an echo of the Bolshevik war cry, Hand left is an echo of the Boshevia was exy, this time from an authentic organ of the Black Hundred—the "Groza" ("The Storm") "On June 18th [when a number of demonstrations took place] the workers of the capital and the soldiers had a review of forces, which marched against the eapitalists with a view to shortening the war and exchanging ministers taken from among the merchants and landowners for ministers among the merehants and landowners for ministers from their own ranks. Against them marched the Jews, supported by the expitalists who are for the continuation of the war. The workers and soldiers threw themselves upon the Jews, soundly beat them, and tore up their banners."

On this "July" soil, "non party organizations" sprang up like mushrooms, and soon began to form themselves into various circles and groups, which proceeded to take practical steps towards preparing a counter-revolution. From among various similar beginnings finally emerged a serious nucleus, the work of which was planned on a large scale A special Press made its appearance, a propaganda was started and members enrolled, propaganda was started and members enrolled, while in some places agents were appointed and gathering-points established. Valuable information received by me at this time made it possible for us to see something of what was going on, and at least to note certain individuals and partially to reveal their object and task. One thing stood out clearly. the aim of the counter-revolution was clearly, the aim of the counter-revolution was not the re-establishment of the fallen dynasty; consequently some successor of the Provisional Government was being prepared somewhere, and in any case this question must have been very seriously discussed. Later it became the special aim of certain groups to "remove" me by some means, however drastic. I was warned of an occasion when the lot had been already drawn to decide who should carry out the sentence, and only an accident prevented the performance of the act itself. Upon considering every aspect of this seditions movement, I decided that the this seditious movement, I decided that the extra judicial arrest and exile of the prominent conspirators would be an entirely suitable measure of precaution in this case (although in the case of a mass movement such procedure is useless and even harmful). However, our means of investigation were technically so imperfect that we did not succeed in suppressing the leading centres in time

The whole time between July 3rd and August 27th may be divided into three periods first comes that of work by primitive methods in small separate circles, and the process of merging the more important of them into one body; in the second, the forces were organized and means devised for an attempt to take advantage of the Moseow Conference; and in the third and last period occurred the decisive effort to seize the governing power by violence under the pretence of a conflict with the Bolsheviks. The aim of the movement was a military dictatorship.]

₹8.

Chairman.-When Kornilov was here on August 3rd, did you not have a conversation with himdid you not simply deliberate on the subject of how he would regard your personal departure from power? Was there no such conversation, discussion or talk?

Kerensky.-I read about this, and marvelled. Somewhere in his published depositions he says that "Kerensky discussed with me or inquired whether it was not time for him to retire"—or something to that effect.

Chairman .- He put it rather differently.

Kerensky.—In reality (it was in this study of mine) I assured him as positively as I could that the existing coalitional Government was the only possible combination of forces, and that any other course would be fatal. I said to him: "Well, suppose I retire, what would be the outcome?" That was what I said. . . .

Chairman .- So there was a discussion ?

Kerensky.—There was no deliberation of any kind. All that Kornilov and others said to the effect that the Provisional Government attached a political value to him is quite absurd. I and other members of the Government did all we could to restrain Kornilov from politics, which were not within the range of his intellect; he did not in the least understand politics nor political developments

Chairman —Therefore this conversation, if it took place, had the character of a discussion, but not, in fact, of a consultation?

Kerensky—I said "What are you aiming at? You will simply find yourself choked in an airless space the railways will stop, the telegraph will not work" The conversation was in that kind of spirit work" The conversation was in that kind of spirit [I remember how, following my question about the dictatorship, Kornilov answered thoughtfully "Well, maybe we shall have to make up our minds even to that" "Well," I remarked, "and that will lead inevitably to a fresh inassacre of the officers" "I foresee that possibility, but at least those who are left alive will have the soldiers in hand," Kornilov replied with decision ] Really, all my relations with Kornilov and my Really, all my relations with Kornilov and my attitude to his enterprises are very well known to the Provisional Government, and ought to be known everywhere. I was obliged to carry on a stiff fight all the time for the maintenance of a single fount of authority and to prevent political adventures. I believe this was the sole method I made use of—to watch and be ready. I am sure that this was my only way, because I could not act (that is to say, bring forward accusations officially in court) on the strength of secret evidence and on the mere friendly information which I possessed I would then have appeared in the opinion of the public like a main suffering from persecution mama. Nothing would have come of this. But all the while I was on my guard and followed the smallest fluctuations which took place in these circles.

Chairman.—Then, as to this incident of the summoning of Kornilov. You stated in your deposition that the Provisional Government did not summon Kornilov, that you found yourself faced with the fact of his intention to come, and that, having learnt it, you tried to prevent him by sending him a telegram which crossed him on the way, and that afterwards he arrived here and on his arrival presented himself. . . .

Kerensky.—He arrived, and his attitude towards me was so "friendly" that he came to me

with machine guns.

Ukrainzev.-With machine guns? What do you mean?

Kerensky.—A motor-car with machine guns went in front, and another motor with machine guns came in the rear. The Asiatic soldiers of Kornilov brought in two bags with the machine guns and laid them in the vestibule.

Chairman.-Really, they brought in machine guns?

Kerensky.-Yes !

Chairman .- And left them there?

Kerensky.—No. Afterwards they took them away, when they themselves were departing. Again one motor-ear with machine guns led the way and another followed behind. This was their manner of leaving.

Ion his previous visit to Petrograd on August 3rd, Kornilov eame without machine guns. The following quotation from the "Russkoe Slovo" gives some idea of the sultry atmosphere which prevailed at Headquarters before the Moseow Conference and the visit to Petrograd on August 10th: "The feeling at Headquarters in connection with General Kornilov's departure was very strained, and this nervousness increased, particularly on account of vague rumours which came from Petrograd of a plot against the Commander in Chief which was said to be in preparation This explains why, during General Kornilov's journey, measures of precaution were taken Nearei to Petrograd the feeling of apprehension of the guard increased, although there was no ostensible reason for it "

Oh yes, I forgot that I was informed of the existence of a certain political "salon," where an organized campaign was going on in favour of Kornilov, and where all kinds of agitation took place and attempts were made to form public opinion. But as this was a lady's salon I will not mention the names, this is of no importance

Chairman—Well, then, in your first deposition you state that on August 3rd Kornilov withdrew his memorandum, and that later he presented it again, personally or through Savinkov, in a revised form, in which new clauses appeared respecting the output of work in the factories Kerensly—No, he brought it to me quite ready on August 10th. As far as I remember the matter

Kerensky—No, he brought it to me quite ready on August 10th. As far as I remember the matter stood thus Savinko and Flonenko met Kornilov at the station and handed him the report there Personally, I believe it was so, although I do not insist upon it I believe it happened as I said. Anyhow, Kornilov came strught to me with this memorandum. A space was left at the end of the document for his signature, and Savinkov signed just under this space, while quite at the bottom of the document Filonenko had put his signature.

Charman—Now, about these paragraphs regarding the railways and factories. When Kornilov came with his fresh report, was he alone or accompanied by Saviakov?

Kerensky - He came quite alone Previously, however, Savinkov insisted that Kornilov should, without fail, make a report to the Provisional Government

Chairman -On August 10th, when he was summoned by you?

Kerensky -- Previously I said at a sitting of the Cabinet that, at a moment when we were wholly occupied in preparing for the Moseow Conference, the sittings of the Provisional Government did not provide either the right time or the right place for a report that required to be considered in detail. Then Savinkov and Filonenko summoned him notwithstanding, still, it all hap pened as I predicted the report was not read before the Provisional Government on August 10th It was read here, in this study, in the evening I summoned Terestchenko and Nekrassov. and Kornilov laid the document before us here

Chairman -You have expressed your views during the day Kornilov did not show you the report earlier

Kerensky -No, I had run through the report during the day and noticed the factories, workshops and railway clauses, which opened up en tirely new questions, moreover, as I have already told you, it contained some preposterous things

Chairman -And then you expressed your objections to it?

Kerensly-I said that from the formal point of view it was quite incorrect After all, said I, who is the Deputy Minister of War? He is an official attached to myself, the Minister, he The Deputy Minister of War had no right to go against his Chief, the Minister, and still less to sign documents Kornilov agreed that this could not be done. He agreed that, as I had not yet seen the memorandum, whereas he had brought it to me supposing that its contents were known to me, it was impossible to misst on its being read before the Provisional Government immediately. He also understood that Savinkov had behaved with a lack of discipline. During the evening, while Kornilov was making his report, Savinkov called I was informed that "the Deputy Minister of War is there". I did not receive him Savinkov was not present while Kornilov read his report, because I considered that he had already retired from the Government. This was obvious to me.

[Savinkov's effort to be present during the reading of Kornilov's report on August 10th was evidently made counting on my "soft heartedness," which would prevent me from refusing before strangers to receive him The fact is that, accord ing to Savinkov himself, after my categorical refusal on August 8th to sign the measures pro peted in the second report, he gave in his resigna-tion, declaring that "in that case the report would be presented to the Provisional Govern-ment by General Kornilov My resignation (he continues) was not accepted I carried on the current work as usual, but I did not report any more to Kerensky" (Which was, of course, quite unwarrantable, I may add) In a conversation with Kornilov on August 10th, Savinkov acknow ledged that his conduct had been an offence against discipline, but considered that it could not be regarded as positively harmful to the State, for during that time there were no urgent reports "On the other hand, my offence against discipline was the only method at my disposal of rousing the Prime Minister to give his serious attention to the report, to which I attached exceptional importance."

Is not the whole character of Savinkov revealed in this incident?

It is true I did not cause official action to be taken in regard to Savinkov's letter of resignation dated August 8th, hoping that he would come back to his senses and would not earry his " threats" about General Kornilov into execution. When General Kornilov actually arrived and began to carry out Savinkov's ideas, I recognized that it was not permissible that the latter should remain any longer in the service of the Government, and I signed my acceptance of his resignation. Thereupon, in order that I might not put Savinkov into an awkward situation on that day, I sent him word through Terestchenko, so that he should not call on me that day... ("Terestchenko informed me," says Savinkov, touching on this subject, "that I was not invited to attend at the Palace that day.") How then, under such circumstances, could Savinkov have resolved to call on me that evening, and how could he count on being received ?]

§ 9.

Chairman.—It has been assumed then that Kornilov's lack of tact was due to Savinkov? A report to the Provisional Government with which you were not acquainted was being prepared?

Raupakh.—And Savinkov did not make any verbal report to you as to the contents of the document?

. Kerensky.—It was in this way: He would begin to speak of the introduction of the death-penalty at the rear; to this I invariably objected, and there our conversation would usually come to an end "If you disagree on this fundamental point," Savinkov was saying, "all the rest is unessential" Now, all the other measures, with the exception of the clauses relating to the railways and factories, had been projected even earlier by the Ministry of War. The complete error into which every newly appointed administrator fell, and which he would innocently propagate, was that nothing had been done before he came, as though he were the first to start upon any reforms. Savinkov was the first, Kornilov was the first, now Verkhovsky is the first—and so on. In reality, all the material for my collaborators had long been collected in full and system-the-ally elaborated into a series of measures which all tended to definite aims [to re establish the organization and the fighting capitally of the aimy]

army]
From the very beginning, when I became Min ister of War, it was evident, without expending much time in one's survey, in what an inextreable confusion Gutchkov, with his preposterous reforms, had thrown the Ministry At a glance it was obvious what a vast work was required in order to amend this muddle and earry out well pluned and thorough reforms Now, Kornilov wished to proceed by Sweeping reforms, a method which could only have shaken the whole State could only have shaken the whole State [In connection with this point the history of reforms made by the Ministry of War, I recollect the words I spoke at the Moscow Conference "Gentlemen, that which many now set down to the account of the Revolution was wrought by the force of elements, not by a conscious action and ill will on the part of malign forces of revolution, this is evident from the fact that all which arouses the indignation of the present regenerators of the army, all that was done before me, without me, and by their own hands."

In fact, the statute which defined the nature of the committees and organizations elected by the soldiers was sanctioned by Gutchkov and the soldiers was sanctioned by Gutenkov and appears in his famous order, No 213. The much-discussed Commission of General Polivanov (formerly Minister of War) which worked out the declaration of the rights of the soldier, and generally has cost the army so dear, existed during Gutehkov's term of office, but was, as soon as my authority enabled me to do so, set aside by me The Admiralty paid also dear for the doings of the Commission of Savitch (member of the Octobrist "Right" in the Fourth Imperial Duma), while V I. Lebedev brought it back to some extent to sanity and activity The Military Council even found means to reduce by May the maintenance of the officers Then, that formation of detachof the officers. Then, that formation of detachments of homogeneous nationality, introduced without the knowledge of the Provisional Government—how many difficulties I experienced later in struggling with the inevitable consequences of this innovation! Again, the shuffling of the commanders at the front—incomprehensible to anyone! Etc, etc!

anyone i Lite, etc. I
I signed the "declaration of the rights of the soldiers," which I received fully prepared as a legacy from my predecessors. To refuse to sign it when its existence was already known in the remotest corners of the front and it was actually in practice, would have been to act upon an "ostrich policy," to believe that the reality disappears because one shuts one's eyes to it I took upon myself the formal responsibility for it, <sup>1</sup> Social Revolutionary, and for a short time the Marine Minister and at the same time I demanded eategorically that it should include not an implicit assumption but a clear and open statement of the rights of commanding officers, under battle conditions, to act by force of arms against those who were disobedient. Such was the origin of the final text of the famons §11, which furnished the grounds upon which the Bolsheviks raised a line and ery about me in the army. Now is the right time to speak of it, let the powers that be reproach me with that crime against the people—they who so piously bow before the inviolability of human life!

Yes, when I was Minister of War it was my lot to be continually cutting down and curtaining various "liberties" introduced under Gutchkov, various "liberties" introduced under Gutchkot, and my collaborators will certainly remember that I sometimes said to them "How strange that a 'violent' revolutionist should have to oppose the mitiatives of the Octobrist 'upholders of the State'!" They will remember, too, how, when signing some restriction or prolubition, I laughingly said "Give me something to sign which would be pleasanter for 'comrades,' otherwise they will be down on me'! Ah, least of all do I wish in any way to do Gutchler as property and ctill. any way to do Gutchkov an injustice, and still less to justify myself! History will have its word to say ind determine the place of each one of us I only wish that more should be known and under I only wish that more should be known and under stood at this present moment. I want once again as at the Moscow Conference, to make this state ment from the time of my coming to the Ministry of War, not one measure was passed which could have undermined the power of the army or the authority of the commanders. From the outset I carried on a systematic plan of work for the revision, codification, and definition of the limits of all the new institutions in the army. Above all, I considered it necessary to proclaim throughout the army, from top to bottom, that "the entire army, without regard to rank or position, ought to set an example of discipline, of obedience of everyone to his eliicf and of all to the supreme command "

In less than a month the very Head of the Army had given an example of insubordination towards his superior —the supreme authority of the Govern ment Thus was confirmed the right of everyone who carried arms to get his own way Kornilov's action played the same part for the army that the counter revolution of October 25th effected for all Russia-it started the army on the road to ultimate ruin 1

Chairman -Who, besides yourself, took part in this Council of August 10th?

Kerenshy -Terestchenko, Nekrassov and Koi nilov himself

Chairman -At this Council did you express your opinion of the report, or have you had no opportunity to do so?

Kerensky -No, I believe only two people spoke,

one of them being Nekrassov, I kept silent

Chairman -You had said what you thought of it during the day?

Kerenshy—All of us said the same thing in the military section most of the projected clauses were just and acceptable, but the form was im possible

Charman — Another question In this report was there any mention of the suppression of the Soldiers' Soviets and Committees in the army?

Kerensky -Not in the second report The situation had, apparently, altered so much that when on another day, on the eve of the Mospe

Conference, the military section of the Government's declaration there was being considered by the Provisional Government, it was found possible to put the question is to the measures in the aimy thus That the Provisional Government accepted the substance of Kormlov's first report, in my exposition of it. At the Moscow Conference it fell to me to bring forward Kormlov's report as formulated by me

I remember this sitting of the Provisional Government on the eye of the Moscow Conference It was marked by great nervous tension Only that morning Kokoslikin had sent in his resigna tion, and the sitting was taking place literally just a few hours before the time of departure for Moscow When it came to the question of what should be said about the army in the name of the whole Government, it was proposed that we should first of all hear the report of the Commander in Chief Following the reading of this report (the first one, which was more militant, but more acceptable in substance, being without the two nonsensical clauses), there was a very sharp discussion. Then I brought forward my version of the clauses of the programme, which, in my opinion, might have met the requirements of the case, the real intentions of the Government, and would have been at the same time acceptable to Headquarters and the views of the general public My formula secured the assent of the Ministers (with the exception of the clause referring to the death penalty at the rear)

Here is the substance of the decisions accepted by the Provisional Government on August 11th respecting army reforms, as they were laid before the Moseow Conference "The experience of these last months has shown that all that was done in a fortuitous, sometimes spasmodic way, sometimes without sufficient consideration, has now to be reconsidered. It is necessary to regulate both the rights and the duties of every man belonging to the army. What was accomplished first was a hasty and fortuitous structure. This liaste was unavoidable, otherwise all this vast mass of material would have gone to pieces after the fall of the despote military power This tendency to 'disaggregate' has been checked Now the work of preparation for building gives place to real construction. All will be allotted their right places and each one will know his rights and obligations The Commissaries, Committees, and disciplinary tribunals will be main tained, but all will assume the forms which are tained, but all will assume the forms which are, now necessary to the army. And we who are, or have been, in the army know where it is possible to draw the line, and where the impossible and the hazardous begin. When it comes to the limit, the Provisional Government will say. 'Thus far and no further'" Then followed the passage already quoted about discipline

In order that it may be understood how the declarations of the Provisional Government differed from the "demands" of General Kornilov, I will quote an extract from his speech, also made at the Moscow Conference, on the Committees and Commissaries "I am not hostile to the Committees I have worked with them as Commander of the Eighth Army and as Commander of the South western front But I ask that their activities should be confined to the economic interests and internal life of the army, within limits which should be strictly defined by the law, without in any way interfering in the sphere of military operations and the selection of commanding officers. I recognize the Commissaries as being a necessity at the actual moment, but this institution will only be effective if the personnel of the Commissaries combines democratic views with energy and fearlessness of responsibility." If we take into consideration that, at the time of the Moscow Conference, the Committees had no legal right to interfere in the question of operations at the front, etc., and compare this passage of Kornilov's with my short formulas about the Committees and Commissaries, it will be evident that the difference between us was only in tone, and in Kornilov's putting the matter in a very personal way.

Here is what was published on the subject of the Moscow Conference in Savinkov's name, on August 18th, in the "Izvestia," the organ of the Central Soviet: "I may state that I remain at the head of the administration of the War Office . . . and according to the statement of A. F. Kerensky I may again work in complete unity with him to bring into being that programme to which he refers in certain passages of his address before the Moscow Conference, and in which I, as well as the Commander-in-Chief, Kornilov, fully concur.
... It would be a mistake to think (and all information which appeared in the Press to this effect is absolutely false) that I proposed to do away with the soldiers' organizations. Neither I away with the soldiers' organizations. Neither I nor General Kornilov proposed to do anything of the kind. Both Kerensky and we stood for the preservation and strengthening of the soldiers' organizations, with the proviso, however, that they had no right to alter the battle-orders or interfere in the question of the appointments and transferences of the commanding officers."

Ilow vital was the new organization of the army, systematically prepared by the Ministry of War and energetically brought into existence, will be evident by comparing the following facts. On July 28th Savinkov, in the name of the Ministry of War, formulated the new situation thus: "With the establishment of the institution of Commissaries, the Supreme Command is in charge of military operations, the army organizations (Committees, etc.) are entrusted with the army administration (commissions). ministration (economic affairs and conditions of ministration (economic affairs and conditions of life), while the Commissaries control the political life of the army." At the Moscow Conference a declaration of the Army Committees was read, in which it was stated among other things that: "The commanding body ought to be left quite free to direct military operations and activities, and to have the decisive voice in regard to military preparations and training. . . . The Commissaries should act as the vehicles of the revolutionary should act as the vehicles of the revolutionary policy of the Provisional Government, the representatives of the will of the revolutionary majority in the country. . . . The soldiers' organizations, being the organs of the soldiers' self-administration, ought to have their rights and obligations fully fixed in and confirmed by the law." Finally, the following regulation was published on March 30, 1918, and accepted by the supreme Military Council of the "People's Commissaries": "The soldiers' commisters will only conserve their economic functions; they are deprived of the right to interfere in questions of service or of military operations. All political questions will be decided by specially nominated Commissaries, who will keep in touch with the Committees." It is evident that matters concerning operations at the front that matters concerning operations at the front will again be within the jurisdiction of commanding officers, no longer appointed by elections!

Thus, through the nightmare-like experiment of Krilenko's folly the miserable remnants of the army returned to the "caunter-revolutionary order of the Kormlovite Kerensky" IJ

Chairman—At the Moseon Conference you set forth in your version the whole of Kormlov's report except the question of the death-penalty at the rear ?

Kerensky-Yes, with that exception, because at the sitting of the Provisional Government on August 11th it was decided to recognize in principle the possibility of applying these or any other measures, including even the death-penalty at the rear, but to bring them into existence only after discussing in a legislative way each concrete measure separately [according to conditions of time measure separately interesting to the moscow and place]

["Let everyone be aware," I said at the Moscow Conference, in reference to the death-penalty at the rear, "that this measure is a very trying one, and let ao one venture to inconvenience us in that another with any unconditional demands. We will the wholes if not permit this We only say 'If the wholes ile devastation and disaggregation, pusillanimity and cowardice, treacherous murder, nttacks on peaceful inhabitants, arson, pillage—if all these continue inhabitants, inson, pillage—if all these continue in spite of our winnings, the Government will combat them in the wny now proposed?" I spoke thus conditionally of the death penalty at the Moscow Conference because on this question the Provisional Government was not only not unanimously "for" it, but had actually had a majority "against" this method of fighting destructiveness and decomposition. On the other hand, the whole Government unanimously acknowledged that the question of the death penalty should not be the subject of a sharp political conflict, especially within the Government itself; the more so as, after the partial reintroduction of the deathpenalty at the front, the quarrel was no longer one of principle but of opportuneness. Personally, I was decidedly opposed to the restoration of the death-penalty at the rear, because I considered it absolutely impossible to carry out the sentence of death, say in Moseow or Saratov, under the conditions of a free political life.

Homicide by sentence of a court of law, in accordance with all the rules and regulations of the official execution ritual, is a great "luxury" that only States with a smoothly working administrative and police apparatus can afford. Setting aside all humanitarian considerations, the practical impossibility of carrying out a judicial death sentence in Russia should have been a conclusive reason for every practical statesman. The short but sad experience of the revolutionary courts-martial even at the front has added very weighty evidence in support of this view of mine.

I feel that readers of these lines in the Russia of the present will be irritated by this goody-goody sentimentalism or "Manilovism," and will ask me indignantly: "What about the executions by order of the Commissaries, the Bolshevik terrorism?"... Yes, exactly; there is terrorism: executions, mass executions; but without any previous sentence by competent judicial authority; assassinations by the police, but not death sentences imposed by courts of law; and that is the whole point. It is the Bolshevik reaction which has proved that in Russia it is not yet possible to take human life by judicial sentence. As far as I am able to judge by the information that has reached me, Mr Bronstein (Trotzky) did not dare, after all, to introduce his guillotine, in other words to reintroduce the death penalty, to be executed with the solemnity of a sentence passed by a court of law In Russia they now practise "shooting on the spot" That, however, is an institution beyond the pale of any State Constitution, or of any culture, however barbane To transform every coward who left the front into a privileged assassin the State has had first to be thoroughly destroyed But even irrespective of these considerations, Kormlov and Filonenko's dea of employing capital punishment as a specific against strikes, locks out, disorganization of tans port and similar occurrences is much too original to be applicable in any State which is at all civilized 1

After "Manilov," a ridiculously sentimental hero in Gogol's "Dead Souls."

§ 10

Chairman—Did not this sitting (of the Provisional Government on August 11th) deal with the question of Kornilov's taking part at and addressing the Moscow Conference?

Kerensky -It did

Chairman - What attitude did the Provisional Government take up?

Kerensky --We had a perfectly definite point of view Our task at the Moscow Conference was clear and definite Our policy, which we applied everywhere and at all times, and which, however, is often by misunderstanding considered a sign of weakness in the Government, consisted in abstrain ing from foreing events or provoking any explosions. In this particular case one of our objects was to create such an atmosphere at the Moscow Con ference that, in the event of Kornilov's addressing the Conference, he should not nrouse a hostile attitude against himself among large masses of people, simply because it appeared to us that at that time Kornilov could not be replaced by nny-body. Being guided, then, by that consideration, the Provisional Government adopted the following plan the Commander-in Chief will deliver an address or report of contents similar to that which he made to us on August 3rd, that is to sny, he will deal with the position at the front, with the state of the armies, the strategic situation and so on The Provisional Government adopted a decision specifically hunting General Kornilov's address in that sense, and in spite of that . .

Charman —And in spite of that, in spite of the wurning, he neted in his own way Had he been warned already here at Petrograd?

Kerensky —If I am not mistaken, he was warned here

[I now recollect that the warning could not have been given at Petrograd, ns General Kornilov left Petrograd on the eve of the meeting of the

Provisional Government 1

After Kornilov's arrival at Moscow, the Minister of Ways of Communication called on him the day before he spoke Then I spoke to him on the telephone and at the Theatre I again sent for him, and told him for the second time of the decision of the Provisional Government and in sistently asked him again to act accordingly When in a reply he said to me that he would speak in his own way, I warned him that he must understand that he would thus be infringing discipline "You should anyhow show an example to the rest, and you speak of breaking discipline," said I At that time General Kornilov was in such a

The Grand Theatre, wherethe Moscow Conference took place.

mood that he was firmly convenced that the Govern-ment was absolutely powerless, he looked upon the Government as, so to speak, a thing in the past, to which no heed need be paid if we, ie the Provisional Government, said that a certain thing must be done or must not be done, our reason for it was solely our fear of him This, I believe, was at the time Kornilov's state of mind and that of his friends

Liber —Allow me to ask you a question Did you know that the address which Kornilov delivered at the Moscow Conference was written by Filonenko, or at least that Filonenko was partauthor of it?

Kerensky—I know nothing as to that [Later I read the following evidence of Filonenko, the truth of which is of course a matter for his own conscience "On the evening of August 18th I asked General Kornilov whether he had pre pared the speech which he intended making at the sitting of the 14th, and upon being told that it was not ready, I offered him my help in sketching out its contents Apart from my desire to be of assistance to General Kornilov, I thought it to be my duty, in view of the responsibility which was incumbent upon me for all acts of a political nature by the Commander in Chief Similar help was also offered to the General by Zavoiko, who met General Kormlov Zavorko's assistance who met General Kormiov Zavoiko's assistance consisted in his writing down at my dictation the text of the speech that I had previously discussed in a general way with General Kormiov With a few additions, dealing purely with some facts, the text as dictated by me was read by General Kormiov at the Conference." In drawing up the speech Filonenko was apparently cognizant of the instructions issued by the Provisional Government to the Commander-in-Chief, for these instructions were substantially complied with in the speech, and all the sharper angles, such as the question of capital punishment elsewhere than at the front, were avoided.]

I forgot to mention that on the day, I think, before his arrival at Moscow, Kornilov, knowing already of Savinkov's resignation, sent me a telegram while on his journey insisting on Savinkov's retention in the service. Then I received a second telegram, in which Kornilov stated that Savinkov's and Filonenko's presence at the Moscow Conference was of the utmost importance for him (Kornilov), as they, S. and F., would support him either in his demands or in his speech—I forget the exact words. That was the kind of telegram I received. Let us assume the less offensive wording (since I am not sure of the exact words): "in his speech." The telegram trither contained the following opinion of Savinkov: a well-known man wielding enormous influence with democracy. Something to that effect.

[In giving my evidence I was mistaken on that point: there was only one telegram mentioning Savinkov, as follows: "Information has reached me that . . . Savinkov has tendered his resignation. I deem it my duty to express the opinion that the withdrawal of so important a man as Boris Victorovitch (Savinkov) from the Government is bound to affect adversely the Government's prestige with the country, more particularly at this serious juncture. I consider Savinkov's presence and support of my views necessary on the oceasion of my speech at the Moscow Conference on August 14th, because those views will have more chance of unanimous adoption if they have the advantage of the prestige attaching to Boris Vietorovitch's great revolutionary past and the authority he enjoys among the large democratie masses. . . ."

Raupakh.-Allow me to return to the question of the memorandum. Was that draft of Kornilov's submitted to the Provisional Government on your behalf in your capacity as Minister of War, or was it submitted by the Commander-in-Chief on his own behalf?

Kerensky.—The memorandum was submitted by Kornilov on his own behalf.

Raupakh.-The new draft which was discussed on August 10th?

Kerensky.-We (Nekrassov, Terestchenko and myself) asked Kornilov about it on the 10th of August in the evening, and he left the memorandum for the Government in its first draft of August 3rd.

Raupakh.-He thought it necessary to bring . . . Chairman .- The Prime Minister has explained to us that this draft was a new one, and was signed.

Kerensky.-The signature of the Deputy Minister of War was affixed to the second draft, but the latter had not been read before the Provisional Government.

Chairman.-That second draft had not been rend?

Kerensky.-That second draft had not been brought out at the time. Later, it disappeared.

[I remember my surprise when, at the Moscow Conference, I heard Kornilov talking of his report presented to the Provisional Government, which had been signed without reservation by both Savinkov and Filonenko. I was surprised to hear the announcement that the draft, backed by three signatures, had been "presented" to the Provisional Government, whereas what I had read, with General Kornilov's consent, at the meeting of the Provisional Government on the 11th of August, was his first memorandum. Now, only having read the conversation on the Hughes tape-machine between Filonenko and Gobetchia, the Assistant Commissary of the South-western front, I learnt that "General Kornilov, after the discussion upon the general situation (on the 10th of August), drove away to the railway station carrying the report with him; but there B. V. Savinkov and myself, thinking that such important questions could not be decided by private conquestions could not be decided by private con-versations between persons however highly respon-sible, persuaded General Kornilov to send the report in an envelope to the Provisional Govern-ment, which he did." However, that "envelope" never reached me. This case provides an example of General Kornilov's lack of independence in political actions.]

To come back to the Moscow Conference, I must say that the only trespass beyond the limits assigned to him made by Kornilov in his speech was a somewhat general discussion of measures to be adopted in the rear, containing the remark that he did not, at present, enter into an examination of the measures necessary for the amination of the measures necessary for the reorganization of railway traffic and industry. Raupakk.—He evaded that question? Kerensky.—We had stipulated that he should not mention the railways, whereas he did mention them.

CHAPTER II

§ 11.

Chairman.—Did information concerning the conspiracy begin to reach you just before the Moscow Conference, or even at an earher date? Did not the evidence grow and strengthen?

Kerensky .- Yes, all the time.

Chairman .- Was not Kornilov's name mentioned in connection with the conspiracy?

Kerenshy.—Kornilov's name cropped up later, not long before the events actually took place. An officer used to put in an appearance at the time, whom later I passed on to the Intelligence Department. He was a bit of a blackmailer, but he often attended the Cossaek Council and was apparently well-informed. This officer would come to warn me, just as Lyov did, that I was threatened with inevitable ruin in connection with coming events due in a few days, that is, the seizure of power by the conspinitors.

Raupakh .- From the parties of the "Right" or . . .

Kerenshy.—Yes, from the "Right." There is no doubt this officer was well-informed, but I never clearly could make out whether he came to me as a seout or simply to betray others and carra something for limited. Only one thing is perfectly obvious to me—he was quite au eourant.

Chairman.-He did not name Kornilov or anyone clse at the time?

Kerensky -He did not name Kornilov, but he named others closely associated with the latter-Zavorko, and others whose names I forget, who were intimate with Kornilov Then, as you know, a Cossack regiment had been summoned to Moscow at the time of the Moscow Conference

Chairman —The 7th Orenburg Cossack regiment 9 Kerensky — without knowledge of the Commander of the Moscow District At this same time the corps of Prince Dolgoruky was advancing to Petrograd from Finland, but was stopped by the Commander of the troops there, General Vas silkovsky Various rumours were spread in the officers' training school For instance, we received a communication from the Moscow cadets to the effect that an officer had warned them that during the Moscow Conference a dictatorship would be proclaimed I do not know what were the results of the investigation of that case I do not know the reason of the Cossaek regiment's move Chairman—Kornilov did not know It was probably done to support some kind of demand

Kerensky -Probably

Chairman -Is it not now definitely known who summoned the regiment?

Kerensky -It has been certified that the regiment was hastily summoned without the know ledge either of the Commander of the Moscow military district the Provisional Government or the Minister of War We knew nothing, and Charman—At the time of the Conference, did not Kornilov's refusal to yield to the Provisional Government's directions excite the Government's suspicions as to his loyalty, did not the Govern ment suspect him in connection with the rumours of the conspiracy?

Kerensky .- You see, I must admit that part of the Provisional Government were completely hypno-tized by Kornilov's personality. Of course, I do not mean that these members of the Government were particularly in touch with him or approved of his bearing, but simply that some of the ministers thought "here is a man outside polities, an honest, daring soldier, who can and should organize the army [but who finds it difficult to strike the right note in complicated 'civilian' affairs]." Therefore, they considered this move as a hopeless action of a helpless man: certainly (they said) the man is completely unversed in polities, unable to cope with them, but, then, like everybody, he has a citizen's feelings l But I and some of the other Ministers did take into account Kornilov's behaviour. I remember telling my intimate friends and also the Provisional Government, on my return, that I was extremely satisfied with the Moseow Conference, as I had been able to learn and understand all I wanted, and know the "how, why and where" of everything. Later, when the Kornilov rebellion took place, one of the Constitutional Democrats said to me: "Only now we understand your attitude at the Moseow Conference, your tone; then your threats addressed to the Right wing seemed unintelligible to us."

[Here are the corresponding parts of my speech at the Moscow Conference: "... Let those who deem the time has come to overthrow the revolutionary power by bayonets beware still more. (Loud applause from the Left.) ... Others at their meetings dare to utter against the Supreme Authority of the Russian State words for which, in the days of the old régime, they would soon have found themselves removed very far, as insulters of Majesty. ... I will now, with the aid of the entire Provisional Government, employ the same energy (as was exerted upon the 3rd, 4th and 5th of July) to set a limit to all aspirations tending to use Russia's great misfortune for injuring the common national interests, and whoever dares present me with an ultimatum, in whatever form, will be subjected by me to the will of the Supreme Authority Once more, I repeat every attempt of the 'inside out Bolsheviks' will find a barrier in me" attempt of the 'inside out Bolsheviks' will find a barrier in me"

In general, the Moscow Conference presents a very important stage in the development of the movement for the establishment of a military dictatorship in Russia. It is but a prologue to the 27th of August. Here the Russian republican reaction becomes definitely conscious of itself. Here this peculiar Russian "Boulangisme" de finitely selects its leader, here forces are reckoned up, here is the rallying point of the social encles which support the movement both ideally and materially. The circle of active conspirators is here greatly widened, here, for the first time, Russia makes acquaintance with her future die tator-Kornilov. The circles sympathizing with the idea of a military dictatorship were so thoroughly prepared and organized, that even on the 30th of August Kornilov could still seriously think of getting a "support," when he declared to the Government that only on condition that the latter agreed to certain terms would he immediately take steps to tranquillize those who "followed him", the organization was so real that, after his arrest, General Kornilov complained bitterly of being forsaken by everyone at the cruenal 'Expression used (as well as Bolshevik of the Right) to denote people employing Bolshevik methods for conservative purposes

purposes

CONSPIRACY AT THE CONFERENCE 119

moment, while General Alexeiev, in his letter of the 12th of September to Mihukov, warned him "that General Kornilov would be obliged to describe in detail before the court all the preparations, all the negotiations with various persons and groups, their participation in the affair, to show the Russian people who were his adherents, and why he, abandoned by all in time of need, alone with a few officers," etc.

Without even peeping "behind the seenes" of all these "preparations" and negotiations, the mobilization and concentration of forecs could be observed upon the open stage itself just before the Moscow Conference A considerable number of meetings took place of various organizations of meetings took place of various organizations looked upon as influential by some sections, and one after another, as if obeying a word of command, they adopted resolutions against the removal of Kornlov On the 6th of August, the Council of the Cossack Thoops' League decided to "inform the Provisional Government and the Minister of War, and to publish in all the daily Minister of War, and to publish in an the daily papers, that (1) (2) General Kornilov cannot be removed, being a true leader of the people and in the eyes of the majority of the population the only general capable of regenerating the army's fighting force and of extricating the country from an extremely serious situation, (3) the Council of the Cossack Troops' League, as representative of all Russian Cossackdom, declare that the removal of General Kornilov will inevitably suggest to the Cossacks the fatal idea of the futility of all further Cossack sacrifices, in view of the Govern ment's not desiring to adopt effective means for the salvation of the Motherland, (4) the Council of the Cossaeks' Umon think it their moral duty to state to the Provisional Government and to the people that they do not hold themselves responsible, as they were until now, for fill Behaviour of the Cossacks' army at the Front and in the rear in case of General Kornlov's discharge; (5) the Council of the Cossacks' Union Loudly and tribular declare theu complete and absolute devotion to their heroic chief, General Lavr Georgievitch Kornilov."

On the 7th of August, the Central Committee of the League of Army and Navy Officers telegraphed to the Minister of War, to the Commanders of groups of armies of different fronts and to the Commanders of armies, their decision about General Kornilov, which was very diplomatically drawn up and concluded thus: "We summon all honest people and all Russian officers to declare their full confidence in him without delay. We do not admit the possibility of interference by any institutions or persons whatever in his acts sanctioned by the Government, and are ready to assist in the fulfilment of all his lawful demands to the Late at night, on the same day and at the same place, the Umon of Knights of St. George carried

the following resolution :-

"(1) The Conference of the Umon of Knights of St. George, having dehberated on the Cossaels' Council's resolution at their special meeting on the 7th of August, has unanimously decided to support this resolution and rimain announce to the Provisional Government that, if they should allow culumny to triumph and General Kornilot to be discharged, the Union of the Knights of St George would immediately call to arms all the Knights of St George for joint action with the Cossaels." Similar resolutions were carried by the Military League and other organizations.

This movement to maintain General Kornilov in his position has culminated in the significant decision of the "Conference of Public Workers," held on the 6th to the 10th of August before the All Russian Conference, and at which were gathered all the best men of the Progressive Coalition of the Fourth Duma The following was telegraphed to Kornilov by Rodzianko "The Conference of Public World are maleographic with the Conference of Public World and the Conference of Public World are maleographic with the Conference of Public World and the Conference of Public Public Workers, welcoming you, the Chief Leader of the Russian Army, declare that they consider all attempts to prejudice your authority in the army and in Russia to be criminal and join their voice to the voice of officers, Knights of St. George and Cossacks In the terrible hour of heavy trial, all thoughtful Russia looks to you with hope and faith" All this campaign was said to be provoked by the rumours of General Kornilov's "possible discharge" under the pressure of the Central Soviet In fact, this campaign was the call to arms which united all the different political purties gravitating towards a "firm government" The Conference of Public Workers, under the leadership of Rodzianko, was the centre which has reviewed the troops, defined the ideal aims of the growing movement and made the final preparations for the assault on the Provisional Government at the All Russian Conference at Moscow The leaders of the movement had such confidence in their success that some most practical politicians determined to take part in the drafting of resolutions on behalf of Kornilov, though only three days later they winced at being reminded of the fact

At the same time, many journeys of representa tives of different organizations and of private individuals to General Headquarters were taking place, as well as conferences at some houses in Moscow, etc. In short, something substantial was being prepared in ease the All Russian Conference justified the confidence in the success of the movement for a "firm government" ference justified the confidence in the success of the movement for a "firm government" Should the eigenmentances prove favourable, preparation was made to bing matters to an end at the Conference itself Hence the attempt to have at hand some real help, to create the necessary atmosphere amongst the cadets of the Officers' Training Schools. Just before General Kornilov's arrival in Moseow, a special pamphlet was largely circulated, under the title "Kornilov, the hero of the people" (or "Kornilov, the leader of the people"), written, in a suitable style, by a prominent member of one of the military associations. Finally, General Kornilov's solemnly eeremonious entry into Moseow took place in conformity with a pieviously settled plan (including the call at the Iverskaya Chapel). During the whole time of his stay different persons, having nothing to do with the army, were being received in his saloon earnage. The great financial experts Wishnegradsky and Putilov "reported" (as stated in Moseow papers) on Russia's financial situation Aladin "presented a report" on the general international situation. Purishkevitel was "presented," Milukov "received", of course Kaledin called, etc.

However, the Moscow Conference did not in the least justify their hopes. Not only was it necessary to abandon the hope of the support of the Conference in proclaiming a Dictatorship, but the very elenched fists of the Preliminary Conference of Public Workers became hands extended for a friendly shake. From the start, the schemes of both the extreme parties of Right and Left were washed away by the general feeling of provincial representatives attending at the All-Russian

CONSPIRACY AT THE CONFERENCE 123

Conference, and the general strike proclaimed by the Bolsheviks had no more success than the call

at Iverskaya

The overrating of his forces by one party and the underrating by the other party of his—a circumstance already mentioned by me—became strikingly apparent at the Moscow Conference Before the Moscow days, a great number of people, even among the democratic masses, were infected by a sickly fear of a counter revolution and looked forward to the Moseow Conference with appre would join that the voice of the country would join that of the "Progressive Coalition" (regenerated in those days at Moscow) and suspecting me of flirtation with the reactionists (I was not at that time acknowledged to be counter revolutionary) On the other hand, the leaders of the coalition of "all thoughtful elements in Russia" (to quote Rodzianko), which prepared themselves for an assault on the Government, were, under the pressure of their provincial constituencies, also obliged to alter their intended resolutions Summing up the results of the Mos cow Conference, the "Izvestia" of the Soviet stated with some astonishment in their issue of the 16th of August that "all men of the 3rd of June,1 who were ready to kick the dying hon, experienced, in the days of the Moscow Conference, a profound sense of disappointment." Noting the unanimity displayed at the Conference by the representatives of workmen and peasants, the masses of the army and navy, by the Zemstvos, the towns, the cooperative organizations, by railwaymen, teachers, etc., the "Izvestia" rightly remarked that "the democracy has been strengthened by the Moscow Conference." Notwithstanding this, though the results of the Moseow Conference seem to have destroyed all hopes of a coup d'etat from the Right, the active adherents of a Dietatorship were not persuaded to keep quiet, but were ineited to pursue their aims by other more peremptory means. An open political struggle with the Provisional Government being found to be not within their power, they decided to storm it unawares by a "sharp stroke"!

Stolipin disfranchised the great majority of the people

their power, they decided to storm it unawares by a "sharp stroke"]

Chairman—Did a plan arise after the Moscow Conference for some changes in the composition of the Government, and have certain names been mentioned in this connection?

Kerensky—No, there was only talk about the necessity of making use of the change of mood arising from the Bublikov-Tseretelli incident and of starting pourparlers with the industrial circles with regard to their being represented in the Provisional Government. The question was then simply that of recalling to the administration of the State representatives of the propertied classes—not Cadets (Constitutional Democrats), but Konovalov and other genuine representatives of these classes.

§ 12.

Chairman—What intelligence have you had about the Bolsheviks' actions, whence did you get it, and was it not of a designedly provocative character?

Kerensky -We used to receive information of

After Bublikov's speech at the Moscow Conference urging the necessity of the loyal co operation of the bourgeoisie with the democratic elements, Tscretelli demonstratively shook hands with him

Bolshevik actions nearly every week or fortnight. For instance, not long before the 27th of August, at a Government meeting, one of the Ministers asked me whether I, or the Minister of the Interior, was aware of the rumours about an impending Bolshevik rising, and whether those rumours had serious grounds. Then I answered (and so, I believe, did Skobelev) that these rumours were of no importance.

Chairman.—What measures did the Government undertake in case the expected Bolshovik rising in Petrograd and Kronstadt took place?

Kerensky.—In Kronstadt, nothing was proposed to be done. I must state that a Bolshevik action then had no importance at all. In my deposition at the preliminary examination, I mentioned my talk with V. Lvov. It is stated there that Lvov was assuring me that a Bolshevik rising was inevitable, and I replied that, as far as we knew, no Bolshevik action was expected to take place. I even told him: "You speak with as much certainty as if you were going yourself to take part in this rising."

[Now, after the Bolshevik counter-revolution, or (to use a better term) after the All-Russian new "Pugatchevstchina," which has destroyed the Russian State, and taking into account our remarkable ability to forget altogether yesterday's events, very many of my readers will think at this part of my statement that, whilst firing at sparrows (the Kornilovites), the Provisional Government ignored the real game, and many others will say that Kornilov had foreseen the possibility of a Bolshevik rising, whereas the Provisional Government was fatally blind, or at least had their left eye blindfolded. These criticisms are thoroughly wrong, because (1) before and at the time of Kornilov's rebellion, there was no real danger or even any symptom of a Bolshevik rising, and (2) before Kornilov's rebellion, the Bolshevik menace was confronted by the whole enormous force of democracy organized in the new local self-government, the Soviets and army organizations, the force which was defending the country and Government from the chaos of the extreme Left.

Kornilov's movement was being prepared just at the time of the most intensive struggle of the statesmanlike and patriotically minded democracy with her anarchist and Bolshevik elements. On the 8th of July a resolution of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet insisted on "the sharp change in the minds of the masses, which was created by the adventurous political attempt (of July 3rd-5th) at an armed rising against the Provisional Government," prepared by anarchist-Bolshevik elements and by some dark forces acting under their colours.

On the 18th of July, the same Central Soviet unanimously stated that "the restoration of the fighting capacity of the army is the most serious problem of the moment." I have already quoted many other proclamations and resolutions of the Central Executive Committee full of the same healthy feelings. It is enough to run over the leaves of the "Izvestia" of the Central Executive Committee for July-August, to be convineed of the intensity of this struggle between the statesmanlike and the anarchist parties, to see how the class feelings were more and more subdued in the minds of the democracy to the needs of the State, how the longing for work and order was reviving, and how the consciousness of the necessity of sacrifices for the country's sake was penetrating deeper and deeper into the minds of the people One should remember how unselfishly the army organizations and commissaries struggled on the front with the Bolshevik propaganda of "my precious life first," how many of them redeemed their unwitting errors of the first days of Revolution, and sanctified their struggle with cowards and traitors by their blood One has only to look through the many hundreds of resolutions drafted by battalions, regiments and divisions at that time, to be convinced that a process of purification was rapidly going on in the minds of the soldiers themselves, and that the position of the commanding chemiserves, and that the position of the commanding officers was steadily getting better. At the same time, the activity of newly formed local government bodies was developing in the country at the expense of the Soviets and various self appointed Committees. The leading Soviets' papers acknowledged this fact and thought it to be a symptom of the healthy development of revolutionary statesmanship But, first and foremost, we must not forget that everywhere the Bolsheviks were then a small minority and were playing the part of an irresponsible opposition Their piteous attempt at organizing a general strike at the time of the Moscow Conference, their forfeiture of their right of independent action at its meetings, decreed by the Burcau of the Central Soviet, and, on the other hand, the boldness of the democracy in extending a friendly hand to the bourgeoisie-all this is no dream, but the actual reality in which we lived before the 27th of August and which carbled me to answer, to the proposal to postpone the proclamation of martial law until the arrival of the 3rd Corps of Cavalry, that I did not need it for that purpose at all that all attempts to repeat the 3rd-5th of July were sure to be a complete failure. Still less was there any real danger to the régime then existing to be anticipated from the attempts of the extreme Right. The "Bolsheyism of the Right" by itself was never to be flared. It was not a powder store which on explosion destroys the foundation of everything, but an match that could fall in a store of explosives and then... The results of the 27th of August have shown what would follow.

BOLSHEVISM AND THE REBULLION 127

On the whole, a comparison of forces showed

One of the most prominent leaders of the S.R. party, notorious for his irremediable propensity towards the Left extremists, speaking of Kornilov's rebellion at the last Congress of his party in November 1917, said: "The sudden increase of energy in the struggle against the threatening military plot and counter-revolution for one moment suc-eceded in reuniting the forces of the revolutionary democracy against the only great party of Russian propertied classes which still held an ambiguous position, the 'party of the People's Freedom' (Constitutional Democrats): the position of socialist democracy and the rather shaken influence of the Soviets was much strengthened by this rising of enthusiasm and energy. This had enabled the Soviets, who had, after the events of the 3rd-5th of July and the dislocation of the democratic front, become more moderate, again to join the line and provoked a new MOVE TO THE Join the line and provoked a new Move to all LEFT. That is why it is no wonder, comrades, that many, and I amongst them, were welcoming Kornilov's action as a step which would bring this MODERATION of the country to its logical end, to absurdity, to a military plot, and would enable us to profit by the mistakes and folly of the Right in order to smooth over and rectify all the harm that was done by the mistakes and folly of the Left."

BOLSHEVISM AND THE REBELLION 129

I was not among those many who were "welcoming" the possibility of bringing Soviets under the Bolshevik influence, but I must state that, in fact, it was only the 27th of August that made the 25th of October possible. And that is really the great crime, the unredeemable sin against our native country of those naïve dreamers, skilful politicians and bold adventurers who undertook to save Russia by means of a "White General." In his proclamation "to the Russian people," General Kornilov, in spite of all evidence to the contrary, states that the Provisional Government acts under the pressure of the Bolshevik majority of the Soviets, etc. Whether Kornilov himself laboured under a delusion, or lied, is of no importance, but there was nothing, nothing whatever, of the kind at the time in the Soviets, which were clearly leaning to the Right. But Kornilov himself proved a remarkable prophet. Almost immediately following his declaration, the Soviets were everywhere actually seized by the Bolsheviks.

On the 27th of August, the lighted match actually fell into a powder-store. On September 1st the Bolsheviks' resolution, containing the programme of the coup d'état of the 25th of October, was introduced into the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet. Here are some of its most prominent points. "All wavering policy as to the organization of the authority must be resolutely set aside; the policy of compromise must be struck at the root. . . The extraordinary powers and irresponsibility of the Provisional Government can no longer be tolerated. The only remedy lies in the creation of an authority composed of representatives of the revolutionary proletariat and peasants, whose policy would be based upon the following principles immediate abolition of all private land property, that of the landowners to be abolished without compensation, etc., labour control of all production and distribution upon a scale embracing the entire State, nation alization of the most important branches of in ruthless taxation of large investments and property and confiscation of war profits, an nullation of all secret treaties and the immediate proposal of a democratic pence to all nations The following immediate measures must be de enced revocation of all repressions directed against the labour classes (read 'Bolsheviks') and their organizations, abolition of the death penalty at the front and restoration of complete liberty of propaganda and of all democratic army organizations. "etc

&lt;sup>1</sup> I.e. a general with dictatorial tendencies (after Skobelev, who used to ride on a white horse).

At this same meeting of the Central Executive Committee, even Dan protested against the "irresponsibility" of the Provisional Government, and declared that "the authorities have no right to tale any repressive measures (against workmen) without a previous discussion with our Commission for the struggle against the counter revolution" The same meeting of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet adopted a resolution of protest against the suppression of two Bolshevik papers which were carrying on an injurious campaign against the officers revolution" The same meeting of the Central Evecutive Committee of the Soviet adopted a resolution of protest against the suppression of two Bolshevik papers which were carrying on an injurious campaign against the officers.

The Red Gurid was created, and developed so rapidly that its statute was worked out in Moscow by the 5th of September. On the 6th of September the Menshevik and Social Revolutionary præsidium of the Petrograd Soviet gave up its powers, and a few days later, in place of Gotz, Skobelev and Tseretelli, appeared Bronstein (Trotzky), Rosen-feld (Kamenev) and Co. . . .

A regular mania for arbitrary arrests was exhibited everywhere: self-appointed "Committees for the suppression of the counter-revolution" sprang up in all quarters, openly refusing to obey my orders to stop their activity after the sup-pression of the Kornilov rebellion. The so-called "Inter-regional Conference" at Petrograd on the 6th of September declared that, "having discussed Kerensky's order, we decide not to dissolve the revolutionary organizations for the suppression of the counter-revolution and to inform the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet of the above decision." The Central Executive Committee agreed to the Inter-regional Conference's point of view.

On September 7th the Moscow Soviet for the first time rejected a Menshevik resolution expressing confidence in and promising to support the Provisional Government on condition of the exclusion from its membership of Cadets (Constitutional Democratic Party), and adopted the Bol-shevik resolution, which on the 1st of September was not passed in Petrograd.

Abominable massacres of officers occurred again in the army and navy on the 30th of August. and I was obliged to send the following telegram to the fleet: "I demand that all atrocious acts of violence shall cease immediately. Crews committing these crimes, under pretext of saving the country and the Revolution, when in reality running the fleet's military efficiency in the face of the enemy, have forgotten their duty, their moral sense, and are traitors to their country. These counter-revolutionary acts of murderers and brutes will forever brand all the Baltic crews with shame. Am expecting immediate report that order is fully restored." The position of the officers became indeed desperate. Army organizations, under pressure of the soldiery maddened by agitators, arbitrarily assumed new powers; much of what had been re-established with such enormous difficulty had to be thrown overboard for the sake of saving, at least, some remaints.

of saving, nt least, some remnants.

Handled by elever demagogues scenting booty, the absurd adventure of a group of persons becomes a "counter-revolutionary Government plot against the labouring masses." The worse than imprudent behaviour of a few prominent members of the Cadet Party in Innving been in touch with Kornilov's movement, offered the opportunity for proclaiming the most influential Liberal Party a eriminal and counter-revolutionary organization, and that opportunity was seized by the very men who, in July, were indignant at the attempt of the Right to lay the blame for the rising of the 3rd-5th of July upon the entire Bolshevik Party. A death-blow was being consciously dealt to the idea of an all-national authority at a moment when nothing but anarchy could replace it.

At the same time, maddened by their failure, the avowed and secret Kornilov faction started a shameless slandering campaign against me, creating the legend of a "great provocation," which, cleverly managed by the writers of the "Pravda" (the leading Bolshevik organ), became the fairy-tale of my complicity, of my being a Kornilovite. It was the beginning of a chaosseptember and October witnessed the torturing agony of the Revolution, which was destined to become the agony of Russia. . . . We are quickly apt to forget what happened but yesterday. I say to those who have genuinely forgotten:

MARTIAL LAW FOR PETROGRAD 133

curse not democracy alone for the Motherland's ruin; remember that the 25th of October could not have been without the 27th of August.]

§ 13.

Chairman.—Was the intended proclamation of martial law in Petrograd called for by strategical considerations, without any connection with the Bolshevik movement and with the question of the organization of a strong authority?

Kerensky.—Had I sufficient time at my disposal, I would, according to my habit in dealing with big legal investigations into political cases, have reconstructed the whole story properly. There certainly existed a certain group of persons at the Stavka (Headquarters) who always endeavoured, whatever events took place in the country, to make use of them according to their own definite tendency. For instance, immediately after the break through at Riga, I began to receive demands for the establishment of martial law, for the transference of all the troops of the Petrograd district to the command of the Generalissimo.

Krokhmal.—Demands from whom?

Kerensky.—From the Stavka, from Kornilov. My task then was rather hard, because again part of the Provisional Government were ready to accept ANYTHING coming from the Stavka. As for myself, taking into consideration the political situation on the one hand, and on the other considering that the front was drawing near to Petrograd and that all the region close to Petrograd might gradually become the army's rear line; that before Protopopov introduced the separate command for Petrograd (which took place on the 10th of February 1917, i.e. only a few days before the Revolution), the Petrograd district was under orders of the Generalissimo; that therefore this orders of the Generalissimo; that therefore this state of things had been changed only seven months ago and that I had no reason for adhering to such a separation of the Petrograd district—considering all that, I decided to pursue but one aim—to safeguard the independence of the Government I explained this to the Provisional Government. by pointing out that, owing to the critical political situation, it was impossible for the Government to be entirely dependent upon the Stavka for military command. I proposed the following: that at any rate Petrograd and its nearest neighbourhood should be detached and constitute a separate district militarily subordinated to the Government. I firmly insisted upon this. Thus the Provisional Government would give over to the Stavka all that was needed for strategical purposes, while Petrograd, as the political centre and the residence of the Provisional Government, must remain extra-territorial, i.e. militarily independent of the Stavka. This plan cost me a week's struggle, but at last I succeeded in bringing the members of the Provisional Government to unanimity and in receiving General Kornilov's formal assent. It became known later that Kornilov thought there would only be a delay of from four to five days, the condition "While the Provisional Government remains in Petrograd" having been interpreted by him as meaning that the Provisional Government would leave Petrograd almost sional Government would leave Petrograd annount on the day immediately following the declaration of the new military order; although there was, of course, not the slightest intention of doing so, as practically no measures have yet been undertaken to prepare a possible evacuation. Later,

General Krimov told me, before committing suicide, that he came to Petrograd in the capacity of an Army Commander with the order to proclaim a state of siege and divide Petrograd into military sections So that we should have been bagged at any moment Therefore, in view of the Stavka's state of mind and of possible complications arising from the sending of troops to the front (which was not proceeding quite smoothly), in view also of possible excesses during the transfer of the Government Offices to Moseow, we intended to keep a certain number of armed troops at the special disposal of the Provisional Government, but in no way subordinated to the Generalissimo (1 e neither to the Commander-in Chief of the Northern front nor directly to the Generalissimo)

Chairman -Therefore, martial law was not to be established in consequence of Petrograd's being formed into a separate unit?

Kerensky—No Martial law was to be established, but on a special principle, under direct control not of the Generalissimo but of the Provisional Government

Chairman -Was there any intention of dis mantling Kronstadt, and, if so, for what reason? Was there a strategical reason?

Kerensky -- That was not mentioned in con-nection with the establishing of martial law in Petrograd That is an old business-as old as last summer

Liber -The official document was signed on August 8th, therefore there was some connection Kerensky -No, that is an old story There are very good guns at Kronstadt which we needed for other positions, but the Kronstadt garrison would not give them up I think that this was due not merely to revolutionary zeal, but to deliberate German propaganda, because Kronstadt is full of German agents From the very begin ning of the Revolution, especially during the summer, the Stavka had given repeated orders for the guns to be delivered to the command of the Northern front for some new positions, but these orders always met with a decided opposition from the Kronstadt garnson, on the alleged plea of the Stavka's treacherous intention of disarming Kronstadt

Krokhmal -For political reasons?

Rerensky—Not only for political, but for treason able purposes The result of the Kronstadt people's behaviour is that the before mentioned positions are insufficiently fortified even now, and they cannot be fortified in the near future. It was decided to dismantle the Kronstadt fortress in June, or July at latest, and to transform Kronstadt into a base for supplies, stores, etc.

Chairman—Was not the fortress considered of no value for military purposes, and was not the coast considered to be of more importance?

Kerensky —Yes, this is why all that was suggested—the removal of the guns and the dismanting of the fortress. All this was intended for purely multiply, and strategial resons.

military and strategical reasons

Laber—And the removal of the Kronstadt gar rison?

Kerensky—This was but the natural consequence of the dismantling of the Kronstadt fortress—Had the fortress been needed and had it possessed any importance as a point of defence, then, what ever the spirit of its garrison, the Government would never have ordered its disarmament and aboliton for political reasons—to suppose so is absurd, but had the heavy artillery been removed there would be sense in such a dismantling. In general, Kronstadt has no military or strategical importance whatever.

The Kronstadt question had apparently been raised owing to the following statement by General Konnilov. Referring to the two tasks to be accomplished by General Krimov upon arriving with his troops at Petrograd, General Kormlov writes that, "after accomplishing his first task, General Krimov would have to send a brigade with aitillery to Oranienbaum and, once there, order the Kronstadt garrison to dismantle the fortress and cross over to the continent. The consent of the Prime Minister for the dismantling of the fortress had been obtained on the 8th of August" It was not I who "gave consent" for the disarmament of the fortress, but I as the Minister of Mnrine liad raised that question and obtained the consent of the Provisional Government, and I never consented to the method of disposing of the fortress proposed by General Kormlov; besides which, he could allot no tashs to a detachment sent to be at the disposal of the To a detachment sent to be at the disposal of the Provisional Government...I must say that the fall of Riga had slightly sobered the Kronstadt garrison, and, when Kormlov was entrusting Krimov with his "task," they were already "surrendering" the guns By a terrible irony of fate, in Tebruary last, the Kronstadt garrison's suspieion of treason in the Stavka's order for the removal of heavy artillery was based upon the removal of heavy arthiery was based upon the Stavka's order being signed by the German name of Captain Altvater, who is now, apparently, playing an important part with Messrs "The People's Commissaries" and has been delegated by them as an "expert" to Brest. The legend of treason at the Stavka was so deeply rooted. in Kronstadt, that every attempt to iemove the artillery drove the crowd to absolute fury, intensified by clever agitators

I must point out, however strange it may seem, judging by the terrible results of the six months' activity of the revolutionary masses, that they were ready to credit the most absurd stories and rumours of treason, and scarched for it with exceptional ardour Tor instance, in the Baltic provinces, the sailors in their ardent scarch for traitors among the local German Barons surpassed all examples of the kind recorded from the practice of the agents of the old régime!

Laber—Had the fortification works in Inland been reduced with Kornilov's knowledge and had this been decided upon at the Moscow Conference?

Kerensky -No, it had been decided upon much

ermer

Liber -But with Kornilov's knowledge? Was he acquainted with it?

Kerensky—No It had been decided before Kornilov's appointment to the post of Generalis simo. It can be verified by the agenda of the Provisional Government's meetings. It was decided to limit measures for the fortification of Finland because they proved to be utterly useless and absurd. They were no good. Why do you attach any significance to the matter?

Liber—Because, in his statement, Kornilov de elares that the cessation of work in Finland was a deliberate act of the Government which has now resulted in disastrous consequences

Kerensky -Nonsense !

["A dehberate act"—the member of the Commission of Inquiry has greatly softened General Kornilov's meaning "The limitation of fortification work in I'niland" is considered by General Kornilov as a proof of the Provisional Govern ment's acting in full accord with the plans of the German General Staff. The story of the "note" transmitted at the meeting of the 3rd of August was, so to speak, a preparation for attack. The Finland story is a bombardment from a 48-inch gum. I am not revolted, nor indignant: a year of revolution has too deeply revealed the secret nature of men. I only want to tell all past, present and future slanderers that he who wishes to calumniate successfully must know well of what he is speaking.

So far as I can remember, the limitation of work in Finland took place in early spring, and in any ense the question arose in A. T. Gutchkov's time. The fact is that, besides important military defensive constructions, a great amount of work went on in Finland under cover of needs of defence, and this work, very advantageous for those who directed it, was unnecessary for the country's desence, ruinous for the exchequer, and extremely harmful politically, since rapine, plunder and violence towards the population acted more potently than any pro-German propaganda. Dozens of square kilometres of timber were cut down around Helsingfors and other places. Priceless forests were destroyed aimlessly and needlessly, and national wealth ruthlessly plundered. It was the Government's duty to arrest this carrival of mischief and put a stop to the activity of such marauders of the rear. Needless to say, all the really defensive works never ceased in Finland for a moment.

Speaking generally, it is possible to point to a whole series of enterprises and works run under the old rėgime as defenee-work, often for no other reason than to escape the necessity of asking the State Duma for a vote of credit. This limitation of work in Finland formed but a small part of the milliards saved from "military expenses" by the Provisional Government in an urgent way, mainly owing to the insistence of all four Ministers of Finance (Terestchenko, Shingarev, Nekrassov and Bernadsky), without distinction of party. Yet, what do demagogues from Right or Left care for dull reality, when so many simpletons are always ready to believe any kind of nonsense?] Chairman.—In view of the coming establishment

Chairman.—In view of the coming establishment of martial law, was any opposition to this measure expected from the Soviet, and did the Government enter into negotiations or confer with the Central Executive Committee concerning the prevention of a possible conflict?

Rerensky.—No, there were no negotiations. Probably, Liber also knows that I had no negotiations concerning the establishment of martial law, nor did any one else negotiate in my name. We had plenty of Soviet representatives: Awksentiev, Tehernov, Skobelev. There was no opposition from any quarter. The Provisional Government only wished to guarantee the capital and country from surprises and experiments. Chairman.—Then the 3rd Corps, which was Chairman.—Then the 3rd Corps, which was marching here, was to represent a military force placed at the disposal, not of the Generalissimo, but of the Provisional Government in ease of emergency?

Kerensky .- Yes.

Charman.—Was there any intention of using these troops for the suppression of possible disorders, or was not the question discussed by the Provisional Government 9

Kerensky.—It had never been definitely laid down for what purpose these troops might be needed. Generally, in case of any emergency.

For the Government needed support. It was not even known against which side they would have to be used. I did not even think there would prise a necessity for using them. In any case, they were not to have my relation whatever either with the Commander of the front or with the Generalissimo.

Chairman .-- Were not these troops intended to form a nucleus for the formation of a new nrmy on the coast in connection with the break-through at the Riga front?

Kerensky .- Hardly that. There existed an old dispute about the formation of an army for the coast. That is a special military question. It had been raised in Gutchkov's time, between the Stavka on one side and Gutchkov and Kornilov 1 on the other. There were many plans as to the organization of the Petrograd troops in case they found themselves obliged to defend not only the "Revolution," but the approaches to Petrograd. It is an old question.

§ 14.

Krokhmal.-Did the intention of summoning the 3rd Corps originate only after Riga fell?

Kerensky.—Yes.
Krokhmal.—Was not there some kind of talk between you and Savinkov to the effect that this corps was meant for a possible suppression of a Bolshevik revolt; and is anything known as to how Savinkov put it in his conversation with Kornilov about the summoning of this corps?

Kerensky .- I do not know the wording of Savinkov's conversation with Kornilov, because I learn from the papers that much has been said at the

Then Commander of the Petrograd Military District.

Stavka which has never been mentioned here; for Stavia union has never been mentioned here; for instance, I read that discussions took place there concerning possible changes in the Provisional Government; absolutely finitistic names were proposed, while we here had no idea of what was going on But here, the question of calling up troops against the Bolsheviks had never been so concretely formulated by the Provisional Government. ment No such great importance was attached here to the Bolsheviks as was at the Stavka, they were a mere meident. At that time, there were generally no particular discussions. For in stance, when we thought at one time of moving to Moscow, it was intended to call up a railway battahon to raise the efficiency of the Nicholas railway [from Petrograd to Moscow]. All these episodes are of no consequence. I recollect that only after Savinko's return from the Stayka, are supplyed to the 25th of August I recovered. only liter Savings recurring the Savings presumably on the 25th of August, I received the first information that a corps was on the march, and that it was actually the 3rd Corps I mention all this because at the beginning of the episode I was questioned by many persons who were more intimate with me, whether I could remember how it all originated—why the 3rd Corps had been sent, and we could not recollect how it all hap pened, why and what—everything had been so little recorded here

[In his statement of the 12th of September, Savinkov gives the following explanation of the causes which led to the summons of the 3rd Civialry Corps "By order of the Prime Minister I asked the Generalissimo to dispatch a cavilry corps for the purpose of establishing, in reality, martial law at Petrograd The establishment of martial law at Petrograd originated from the necessity of subordinating the Petrograd military district to the Generalissimo, in consequence of recent events at the front. The diaft of the declaration of martial law at Petrograd was declaration of martial law at Petrograd was approved, to the best of my belief, by the Provisional Government, of which Tehernov was also a member It goes without saying that this envalry corps, being at the disposal of the Provisional Government, was obliged to defend it from all antagonistic attempts independently of their origin, just as the joint detachment defended the Government against the Bolsheviks at the beginning of July" ("Volia Naroda," September 12th) This formula is perfectly correct. It is linghly probable that Savinkov, when asking Kornilov in my name to send troops to the Provisional Government, founded this demand upon a possible danger from the Left. What else could he tell Kornilov? As to Savinkov himself being tell Kornilov? As to Savinkov himself being perfectly alive to the danger from the Right, this is plain from his following statement "I was satisfied (on August 24th) by Kornilov's statement of his readiness fully to support A  $\Gamma$  Kerensky However, the general state of mind at the Stayka appeared to me as being highly strained, and I was not at all surprised when, on my return journey in the train, the Commissary of the 8th Army spoke to me of possible attempts at a conspiracy of the Stavka Staff, and offered to conspracy of the Stavka Staff, and offered to put at once the entire 8th Army (of which he was sure) at the disposal of the Provisional Government, an offer which I gratefully accepted, promising to send him a telegram in case of necessity I did send that telegram on the 27th of August, having previously reported my conversation to A I Kerensky" On his return from the Stavka on the 25th of August, Savinkov told me that, during the first day of his stay, Kornilov's nttitude had been quite "irreconcilable," but by the end of the second day he, Savinkov, succeeded in making him change his mind. I must say that Savinkov himself always suspected the Stavka

SUMMONING OF THE 3RD CORPS 143

Staff of plotting, but exempted Kornilov himself.]

Kerensky.—Concerning the 8rd Corps, I recollect Saninkov telling me, after his return from the Stavka, that he had succeeded in dissuading Kornilov from sending here the "Savage Division" and appointing Krimov. I do not know whether you are awaie that I had, just at that time, signed the order appointing Krimov to the command of the 11th Army. This was done for greater reassurance.

Krokhmal -For whose reassurance?

Kerensky -For mine. Once General Krimov was in command of the 11th Army, there was nothing in command of the 11th Army, there was nothing more to be said. But, it seems, he remained all the while at the Stavka, working out the disposition of the troops "in ease of a Bolshevik revolt," and then suddenly made his appearance here. I was extremely surprised to hear of his arrival I asked him: "Who are you?" "I am the Commander of the Special Army" "Which?" "The one appointed to Petrograd" Krokhmal—And yet there had been no order appointing him to the command of the very appointing him to the command of this very

army?

Kerenshy.—No My assistant, General Iakubovitch, was present at our interview I asked him "Do you know anything about it?" "No, I know nothing; neither does the Ministry of War."

Chanman—We have a lacuna concerning General Krimov, as we had not examined him; therefore, the Commission begs you to state whether you have had any explanations from him.

Kerensky.—I have a vivid recollection of the whole scene, and I can describe it to you.

Chairman.—What information had you as to the movements of his corps before he put in an appearance?

Kerensky.—You see, we dispatched an officer, who had formerly served with him, to meet him at Luga and explain the situation. We did this after our telegrams ordering him to stay his march remained unacknowledged. This mission succecded. General Krimov nrrived here accompanied by this officer (General Samarin). When General Krimov was announced, I went to meet him, invited him to my study, and then we had a talk. As far as I can remember, General Iakubovitch, Assistant Minister of War, was also present. General Krimov began by saying that they had no special aims in marching here; that they had been sent at the disposal of the Provisional Government; that they had received orders to aid the Provisional Government; that no one ever dreamed of acting against the Government; that, as soon as the misunderstanding had been cleared, he had given orders to halt. Then he added that he was in possession of a written order to that effect. At first he would not produce the order, and I had no reason to doubt that he had been deceived by it. He apparently hesitated to deliver it, but did so at last. The order was absolutely clear and precise.

Chairman .- You were good enough to give it

me.

Kerensky.—You know it. . . . It is very eleverly written. I read the order. I knew Krimov and always greatly respected him, as a man of decidedly very moderate views, but highly bonest and decent. I rose and slowly approached him.

He also rose. He saw that I was greatly impressed by the order. He approached this table; I came up quite close to him and said, in a low voice: "Yes, General, I see. You are undoubtedly a very clever man. Thank you." Krimov saw that the part he had played was perfectly clear to me.

(To the Chairman) I sent for you at once and passed it to you.

Chairman .- You gave me the order.

Kerensky.—After this, General Krimov told me that he had been at the Stavka, where they had drafted the disposition and the statute for proclaiming a state of siege at Petrograd; he added that, according to this plan, Petrograd was to be divided into military sections. I am sure he found the situation unbearable, because he, Krimov, had swerved from the truth; first of all, he did not openly confess his own part in the affair, and secondly, clause 4 of the order begins with the words: "From communications of the Stavka and information received by me, I learn that riots are taking place in Petrograd . ." etc. I asked him what were his grounds for making this declaration in his own name about riots. He was driven to refer to some "officer," travelling he did not know whence or whither. In short, he could not explain it. Then we parted, i.e. I dismissed him, retusing to shake hands with him.

It appears that in about an hour or two after Krimov left my study he committed suicide. It should not be thought that I ceased to respect him when I refused to shake hands with him. Not at all. The whole of Krimov's behaviour during his interview with me, his calm resolve—after momentary hesitation—to hand over to me immediately the convicting document (the order to his corps), his noble silence as regards General Kornilov's telegrams of August 27th–29th, his manly confession of his belief in a dictatorship, all give him an undeniable right to the highest esteem of his political enemies. All these facts clearly illustrate the honest, courageous, vigorous nature of the man. But I, as the most official person in the most official surroundings, as Premier and War Minister—I could not and had no right to treat this general gully of a crime against the State in any other way.

By the way, General Krimov was one of those ligher officers of the Russian army who, in the winter preceding the Revolution of February 27th, together with a part of the "propertied classes," planned, and were preparing, the deposition of Nicholas II.

The story of the 3rd Corps' march on Petrograd, led by General Krimov, throws important light on the question whether General Kornilov's rebellion was a "misunderstanding" caused by my "provocation," as it is termed in Kornilov's address to the "Russian People," or whether it was a premeditated crime I shall record a few facts which will solve this question, without as yet drawing any conclusions therefrom.

On August 21st Savinkov, the Deputy War Minister, arrived at Headquarters, and reported to the Generalissimo the Premier's suggestion to place a detachment of troops at the disposal of the Provisional Government, under the struct condition that Krimov should not be at the head of the detachment, and that the native Caucasian division should not be sent with it.

On August 24th SavinLov left Headquarters, having secured (according to his statement) General Kornilov's consent "to send a cavalry corps, not to appoint General Kilmov as its commander, and to replace the native division by a regular cavalry division"

But, first, General Krimov, just appointed Com-mander of the 11th Army by the Provisional Government in the usual way, ie on the recommendation of the Generalissimo, turns out to be at Headquarters as "selected" to command the Petrograd army, and precisely at that time is completing the study of the plans not only "of the defence" of Petrograd against the Germans, but also of its occupation Secondly, not only does the cavalry corps remain under General Krimov, but, as far as I remember, precisely on August 24th, by special orders from the Generalis simo, Krimov was also placed in command of the native division Thirdly, not only does the native division remain unreplaced by regular cavalry, but it heads the advance on Petrograd Fourthly and finally, the detachment, far from Government, is advancing for the accomplishment of "two tasks" expressly entrusted to General Krimov by General Kromiov

On August 25th Savinkov returned to Petrograd and informed me of General Kornilov's "consent" to accept my conditions, and at the same time troops were already approaching Petrograd, but they were not those troops which would have had the right to do so On August 26th Kornilov signed an order for the formation of the Petrograd army, an order which—under the pretence of its being premature—was not transmitted to the troops, nor was the Government informed of it. Why was it just on August 26th? There certainly must be some reason for the fact that on the very

Krimov was entrusted with the following task: "On hearing from me (General Kornilov) or from local sources of the commencement of a Bolshevik rising, advance on Petrograd immediately, occupy the city, disarm those divisions of the Petrograd garrison which join the rising, disarm the population, and disperse the Soviets." All this happened before the evening of August 26th, i.e. before my conversation with V. N. Lyov and with General Kornilov on the direct wire, when the "great provocation" is alleged to have taken place. On August 27th at 2.40 a.m. General Kornilov, as yet ignorant of his dismissal, sent a telegram to the Deputy War Minister beginning with the following words: "The concentration of the corps in the environs of Petrograd will be eompleted by the evening of August 27." . . . He thus made the Government believe that it was the detachment which was to be placed at the disposal of the Government without Krimov or the native division. At the same time I and Savinkov were eagerly "awaited at Headquarters" on August 28th, certainly not later. It was not in vain that V. N. Lvov implored me not to go there. And what would have been the position of the Provisional Government if it had, following on the same telegram, proclaimed martial law in Petrograd on August 29th and had then to face Krimov's troops, who had a task of their oren to perform? Would not the Government itself be then declared to be acting under the influence of then "Bolshevik majority of the Soviets," as it soon happened (August 27th)? This being so, did a change occur in the conduct of Headquarters after the evening of August 26th, after my conversation with Kornilov over the direct wire?— No change whatsoever.

"That General Kumov did not carry out the task entrusted to him," Kornilov explained by the fact that "communications with him were severed, and he could not receive my (Kornilov's) instructions No special measures to maintain my connection with him were taken, because the corps was advancing on Petrograd at the demand of the Provisional Government, and I could not foresee that the Government itself would order connections to be severed between the corps and Headquarters" In other words, General Kormlov assumed that, in face of the demands put forward through V N Lyov, and after our "conversation" on the direct wire, I would still feel happily con fident that there was no connection between Headquarters' "offers" and the advance of the 3rd Corps

On August 29th General Kornilov gave orders to General Krimov to continue the movement on Petrograd, and "in case of communications being severed again, to act according to the cir-cumstances and to my original instructions"

But this was not the first order since August 27th On the morning of August 29th General Krimov already issued his own order No 128, which he afterwards handed over to me personally These are its most characteristic points -

"1 I received the following telegrams from the Prime Minister and the Generalissimo -

(Here he quotes the text of my announcement of the dismissal of General Kornilov and the reasons thereof, as well as the text of General Kornilov's declaration of his open move against the Provisional Government)

"3 Having received M Kerensky's telegram, I sent to the Commander in Chief of the Northern Front for orders General K-sky stated in reply . . . that in these hard times all Com-manders-in-Chief recognized General Kornilov to be the sole Generalissimo, whose every order was valid Moreover, the Cossaels (it should be re-membered that the 3rd Army Corps was a Cossaek one) long ago deedded that General Kornilov could not be removed, which I hereby proclaim for general guidance

"4 To night I heard from Generalissimo's Headquarters and from Petrograd that riots have broken out in that city. Tamine is increased by the insane actions of the people, who, panie stricken at the sight of their own troops marching on the sight of their own troops matching of Petrograd, destroyed the railway and thus stopped the supply of food to the metropolis And who were those troops they were so afraid of? They were those who had sworn on oath to be loyal to the new regime, those who at the Moscow Conference had declared their belief in the republican order as the best suited for Russia," etc.

This order scarcely requires explanation I think everyone will now understand why General Krimov did not hand over to me his order at once And does not this order remind one of Kaledin's conduct at the Moseow Conference and the noisy cam-paign in favour of Kornilov's "irremovability," which I have already mentioned above, as well as many other things?

To what extent General Krimov's march on Petrograd was anticipated and how scrious were Petrograd was anticipated and now scrious were the hopes centred in it can be seen from the fact that Headquarters could not to the very end reconcile themselves with what had actually hap pened On September 1st General Lukomsky spoke over the Hughes tape machine to General Alexiev, who was then at Vitebsk, already on his way to Moluley -

"For me to receive a definite reply from General Kornilov, it is highly desirable that you should explain what is happening to Krimov."

Even Kornilov himself admits that only at the moment "when I learned from a conversation over the direct wire of General Krimov's death did I take measures to settle my conflict with the Prime Minister Kerensky in a bloodless and painless way as far as the country and the army were concerned"

These are the facts There is one which I wish to emphasize As Prime Minister I suggested that a detacliment of troops should be sent and placed at the disposal of the Provisional Government on certain terms. This suggestion was not carried out by the Generalissimo, so that the march of Krimov's detacliment cannot be explained as being the result of an "agreement," with the Government.

And then arses the pertinent question, why these troops were marching on Petrograd even before the evening of August 26th 1

§ 15

Krokhmal—Was the question of bringing up additional troops considered by the Provisional Government, or at a private conference of some of its members?

Kerenshy—I think the matter was settled by eon-versations. Usually, at meetings of the Provisional Government questions are put to me by individual Ministers, e.g. about the general situation, or whether the Provisional Government has at its disposal sufficient forces on which it can rely, or what are the relations between, and the state of, this and that body of thoops, etc.

GOVERNMENT AND THE 3RD CORPS 153

Krokhmal -Not at official meetings?

Kerensky - We hold various kinds of meetings-business, political and private I always try to report to the Provisional Government about the general political situation, so as to keep it always well informed At that time the question arose of the necessity of securing a sufficient force at the command of the Government to maintain order under such difficult circumstances I remember that in addition we also had to deal with the grave question of the influx of refugees from the Baltie provinces I remember, M Shablovsky, your report on this question in connection with the state of affairs on the Baltic railway lines, which I then submitted to the Provisional Govern ment An active propaganda was being carried on among the troops on the lines of retreat towards Petrograd On the whole there was much tension in the atmosphere Add to this the inevitable conflict between myself and Headquarters which sooner or later was sure to ause, and I believe you will admit there was sufficient cause for alarm concerning the position of Petrograd

Krokhmal -Do you remember when the question of bringing up troops was considered by the Pro visional Government, and which of its members were present?

Kerenshy -No, I don't I even think I can state with certainty that we did not discuss at state with certainty that we did not discuss at all which corps to bring up, the 3rd, 5th, or 12th. It was merely asked, "Aic you sufficiently secure?" and the Minister of War (or the Minister of the Interior) answered, "The necessary steps are taken," or "everything will be arranged." Krokhmal—Do you remember whether the question of the necessity of bringing up thoops in connection with the then possible of expected.

Bolshevik rising was put before the Provisional Government?

Kerensky .-- No, I don't.

Krokhmal.—Did not Savinkov speak to you about it?

Kerensky.—Possibly. The subject was discussed.

Krokhmal.—But it was not definitely referred to when it was decided to bring up troops?

Kerensky.—It would be wrong to assume that our attention was mainly directed that way, that we were expecting a Bolshevik coup. Our attention—my personal attention—was directed elsewhere. You remember, just at that time some of the Grand Dukes were arrested, and various scarches were made. After the Moscow Conference it became quite clear to me that the next blow would come from the Right, not from the Left.

Chairman.—Did Savinkov go to Headquarters with the knowledge and according to the instructions of the Government, or on his own initiative?

Kerensky.—Both. You see, he arranged a conference of all Commissaries at Headquarters for August 24th (which I either did not know or had forgotten), to discuss various proposals of reforms; at the same time it was necessary to arrive at a decision on many urgent questions, e.g. about the Officers' League, about sending troops, etc. And as the question of proclaiming martial law, with the exclusion of the Petrograd area, was also to be considered, I asked Baranovsky to go with Savinkov in order that the military business should receive better attention. [I remember that in this very room I met Savinkov, two of my colleagues (Iakubovitel and Tumanov) and Baranovsky. We were busy in defining the area which was to be excluded from the jurisdiction of the Generalissimo after the Petrograd district had been transferred to that of Headquarters Then it was decided that Baranovsky should also go to Headquarters

Chairman—Was it reported to you and did you know that Savinkov was taking Mironov with him, and what was the object of it?

Kerenshy -No, I did not know about Mironov. I remember that the day after their departure I wanted Mironov to arrange that the movements of a certain person should be watched I sent for Mironov. I was told that he had gone to Headquarters with Savinkov.

At that time N D Mironov was the Head of the Counter-Espionage Department at the General Staff of the Petrograd Military District. His arrival at Headquarters with Savinkov caused considerable alarm and enormous irritation.

"I know," said Kornilov to Savinkov excitedly, "Kerensky wants to arrest a valuable officer. . . . He sent Mironov, this Professor of Sanskrit, with you I know that Mironov is engaged in political espionage. He has come here to watch us ... "Mironov has come with my permission," retorted Savinkov "Kerensky did not even know that he was going with me . . "

"All the same, I warn you, if Mironov dares to arrest anyone here, I'll have him shot by my Tekintzy (Asiatic soldiers)"

"He cannot arrest anyone without my orders," remarked Savinkov.

This is a picturesque fragment from Savin-kov's conversation with Kornilov on August 24th. The alarm caused at Headquarters by Mironov's arrival will be perhaps better understood in the light of the fact that it was Savinkov's intention to take serious measures against the Main Committee of the Officers' League and the Head-quarters' Political Department in connection with information received concerning the plot.] Chairman.—What report did Savinkov give of his visit to Headquarters?

Kerensky.—Not a very detailed one. He told me besides that on the first day (August 23rd) Kornilov adopted an extremely excited and irreconcilable attitude towards me. Only after long negotiations did Savinkov succeed in alleviating this animosity, and at his departure Kornilov himself, or a representative of his—I don't remember who—called on Savinkov in order to ask him to tell me that Kornilov desired to co-operate with me and was devoted to me.

At the same time Baranovsky, who also returned, told me, as I have already mentioned, that the whole atmosphere at Headquarters was unboarable, that "it is even impossible to mention your name there," that "practically no work is being done," because at all desks one heard nothing but political discussions.

[I must here mention that one of the most unexpected aspects of Kornilov's policy was that from the moment of his appointment as Generalissimo all questions, military, strategie, or concerning the front, completely ceased to interest Head-quarters. What used to be the chief subject of my discussions with Alexeiev and Brussilov now fell into the background. I remember that on several occasions I expressed surprise at such a hypertrophy of politics where such questions should not have existed at all.]

Chairman.—Did Savinkov tell you about his proposal not to proclaim martial law in Petrograd until the 3rd Corps approached the city?

Kerensky.—Yes, he did. But I pointed out that I did not attach any importance to the advance of the corps, that I considered the delay quite superfluous, that the measure was necessary in view of altered circumstances, and that martial law could be proclaimed without waiting for new troops. So you see, I disagreed with Savinkov. The Government did not discuss this particular auestion.

Chairman .- Did he report only to you personally?

Kerensky.-As far as I remember, no report was made to the Government on the subject, apart from a statement of the general results of his journey to Headquarters.

Chairman.-Was it not then intended to send Terestehenko on a mission to Headquarters, and for what reason?

Kerensky.—To which mission do you refer? Chairman.—To the one immediately following on Savinkov's return. What was the reason of it? Kerensky .- He visited Headquarters in July, and brought back the news that Filonenko was intriguing against Lukomsky.

Liber .- And what about his visit before Lyov? Kercnsky.—Oh, yes. He went to Headquarters on his own business, and possibly might have wished to discuss the general situation personally. I believe at that time Maklakov had to go there. whose ambassadorial appointment to Paris was then under consideration

Chairman .- So there was no connection between Terestehenko's visit and Savinkov's mission?

Kerensky.-That, I think, is very unimportant. It did not occupy my attention at the time. [But now I can say definitely that it had nothing to do with Savinkov's mission.]

Raupakh.-May I ask whether Baranovsky had any object of his own in accompanying Savinkov to Headquarters?

Kerensky.—He went as Chief of the Military Cabinet, mainly to investigate the question (of the exclusion of Petrograd) from a military point of view, and was only present at the meeting at which this question was discussed.

Raupakh.—Does that mean that he was instructed to insist on the exclusion of Petrograd?

Kerensky.—The military authorities were always against the exclusion of Petrograd, as were also Iakubovitch and Prince Tumanov at the mecting in my room mentioned above. But for considerations of my own, I desired to make the military aspect of the question clear to Kornilov, and as all here were more or less unanimous, Baranovsky was sent to Headquarters to defend my point of view.

§ 16.

Chairman.—When you first discussed with Lvov the question of reorganizing and strengthening the Government, who mitiated the discussion, and what were the concrete suggestions made by Lvov?

Kerensky.—I had no such discussion with him. Chairman.—What were the concrete suggestions he made?

Kerensky.—Among the infinite number of people who come to me with all sorts of serious propositions and "schemes," useful advice and idle talk (everybody being convinced that the real cause of all the disasters is that I did not give him a hearing), came Lvov. He did not talk much about his "schemes" or the changes in the Provisional Government, but tried to persuade me that my "song was sung," that I had no support anywhere, because I was now "hated by the Right," and that I had "lost my influence" with the democracy owing to my resolute repressive measures against and persecutions of the Bolsheviks, that I and my Provisional Government had "lost our footing," that support must be found, that he could help, that Cabinet changes were necessary, and that elements even more moderate than the Cadets ought to be included. As this happened soon after the Moscow Conference, I considered it natural for a man to come and express such opinions. I answered in general express sheri opinions. I miswered in general terms that I was a convinced adherent of Conlition Government, etc. I do not now remember the details of the conversation, but the gist of it was that V. Lvov tried to show that I "had no support," whereas he had something or somebody belind his back. He kept on repeating: "We can do this. We can do that." I asked him who "we" were, what he could do, in whose name he was speaking. To these questions he replied: "I have no right to tell you. I nm only authorized to ask you whether you are willing to enter into discussion." I could see from what he said that he came on behalf of a distinct group. There was no doubt about it. More than once he hinted that he had just come from somewhere, and that I must return the same day, but "before leaving I must have your answer." He emphasized the following: "I am instructed to ask you whether you are willing or not to include new elements in the Provisional Government, and to discuss the Provisional Government, and to discuss the question with you." I replied: "Before I give you an answer, I must know with whom I am dealing, who are those you represent, and what they want." "They are public men." "There are various kinds of public men," said I. At last I said. "Well, supposing I have no support, what can you offer, what are the actual forces you rely upon? I can imagine of whom your group consists, and who those public men are" He then hinted that I was mistaken, that "they" were backed by a considerable force which nobody could afford to ignore

Such was my conversation with Lvov Of course I gave him no instructions, no powers I believe he had admitted that in speaking as he did at Headquarters on my behalf he "exceeded" his warrant Of course he did, because I told him nothing of the sort I plainly told him " Refore I can give you any answer, you must tell me whom I am dealing with"

Chairman -And he said he was not entitled to tell you?

Kerensky —Yes, that was what puzzled me most In the tangled mass of information I had about the intended lines of action of various groups, Livov for a long time I saw that he did not merely drop in to have a chat He said he wished me well, that my personality interested him, and he did not desire my rum, etc

Chairman—As he did not say from whom he came, because he was not authorized to do so, did you not suggest that he should obtain such authority?

Kerensky —I did not say "authority" I said, "Before I express my opinion, I must know whom I am dealing with and in whose name you are speaking"

Chairman -How did he end the conversation? Kerensky—He did not He asked "Will you negotrate if I tell you?" I replied "Tell me more definitely what you want to learn from me and why." He said "Good-bye" and departed. That was the end of it. Headquarters were not even mentioned.

Chairman—Did you expect him to come again after this conversation with clearer and more definite proposals, or did you consider the matter finished?

Kerensky.—I thought the matter would end at that. Generally speaking, I did not attach any importance to it, but some of the details, and more particularly Lvov's manner, attracted my attention I suspected that V. Lvov was referring to that Rodzianko group, the group of "men who have been," which then had its headquarters in Moscow. It must not be forgotten that it was a time of all sorts of talk and idle scheming. Even in June-July people sometimes eame to me with various suggestions as to the propei organization of the Government Direct offers of dictatorship were even made to me. Such offers made it easier for me to keep an eye on those round Kornilov, because they were the same men who had previously tried to gain my ear
Chairman—Did Lvov suggest inclusion in the Government of only those elements of the Right whose support could be relied upon, or did he suggest strengthening the Government by gaining the support of wider masses? Or did he suggest any real force, aiming at strengthening the Government ?

Kerensky -- When he first came we talked about the inclusion of new elements to widen the range of influence of the Provisional Government, and when I asked: "Who can raise the authority of the Government, what is the use of appointing two or three more Ministers?" he answered with a smile, "Oh well, you may be mistaken, there are forces behind us." "What forces?" "You don't know, but there are." This was what particularly impressed me. Lyov seemed to know something; he was not talking for himself.

Chairman.—Did you speak to your colleagues Zarudny or Nekrassov or to somebody else about Lvov's suggestions to the effect that here was an attractive offer, and did you instruct anyone to find out who was behind his back and who was responsible for the offer?

Kerensky.-I don't remember. . . . No, indeed,

I gave no such instructions.

Chairman .- Did you mention the matter at all?

§ 17.

Kerensky.-I could not tell you. I believe I merely mentioned casually to one of my colleagues that Lyov had been talking with me, but I cannot speak with certainty for the moment, because I did not attach much importance to his visit. I must say that on his second visit on August 26th he completely changed his manner. He tried hard to arrange an interview with me. I remember; I had neither time nor desire to see him, particularly as he was incensed when he left the Provisional Government. I believe he then said to Terestehenko, "Kerensky-c'est mon ennemi mortel." The second time he came, I met him with the following words: "You have come again to talk about the inclusion of new elements in the Provisional Government." (I am not certain about the actual words, but such was the meaning.) He answered: "No, I have come to discuss a totally different subject; the situation has completely changed." This time he made no mention whatsoever of the "great provocation," and all his followers conducted against me and a certain part of the Pro visional Government a most obdurate campaign.

About six o'clock on August 26th V N Lvov came to me in my official study, and after a long conversation about my "doom" and about his anxiety to "save" me and so forth, said in so many words that—

General Kornilov declared to me (Kerensky) through him (Lvov) that no assistance whatever would be given to the Provisional Government in its struggle with the Bolsheviks, and that in particular Kornilov would not answer for my life anywhere but at Headquarters, that the continuance of the Provisional Government in power could no longer be permitted, that General Kornilov invited me to urge the Provisional Government to transfer its powers that very day to the Generalissimo, and, pending the formation by him of its new Cabinet, to hand over the direction of current affairs to the Assistant Ministers and to proclaim martial law throughout Russia. As to myself and Savinkov, we were urged to go away that night to Headquarters, where Ministerial portfolios awaited us—for Savinkov the position of War Minister, for me that of Minister of Justice To this V N Lyoy added that this last condi-

To this V N Lvov added that this last condition—that is to say, our going to Headquarters and the rest—was put to me privately, and was not to be disclosed at the session of the Provisional

Government

This communication was an absolute surprise to me, and especially the fact that it came from the lips of V N Lvov, because his name had never before been mentioned in any of the reports or statements concerning the plot which I had in my possession

At first I burst out laughing. "Don't joke,

V. N.," I said.

"There is no time to joke; the situation is very serious," Lvov answered; and with extreme excitement and evident sineerity, he began to urge me to save my life. For that there was "only one way, to yield to Kornilov's demands." He was beside himself.

I walked hastily up and down my large room, trying to understand, to feel, what was the real meaning of all this—Lvov's coming, and the rest of it. I remembered what he had said at his first visit about "real force," and compared it with the feeling that existed against me at Headquarters, and with all the reports about the ripening conspiracy which was without a doubt connected with Headquarters; and as soon as I had got over my first surprise, or rather shock, I decided to test Lvov once more, to verify his statement and then to act. And to act instantly and resolutely. My mind was at work. I did not hesitate for an instant in my acting. I rather felt than understood all the extraordinary scriousness of the situation, if . . . if only Lvov's words were even remotely in accord with reality !

Calming myself a little, I deliberately pretended that I had no longer any doubt or hesitation, and that personally I had decided to agree.

I began to explain to Lvov that I could not convey such a communication to the Provisional Government without proofs. He reassured me, saying that every word he had uttered was true. saying that every word he had accered was crue. At last I asked him to put into writing all Kornilov's points. The readness, the assurance, the quickness with which Lvov agreed and wrote down Kornilov's proposals gave me full confidence that Lvov was not only fully informed, but that he had no doubt as to the realization of the plan.

Here is the text of the note Lvov wrote :-

General Kornilov proposes-

(1) That martial law shall be proclaimed in Petrograd.

(2) That all military and civil authority shall be placed in the hands of the Generalissimo.

(3) That all Ministers, not excluding the Premier, shall resign, and that the temporary executive power shall be transferred to the Assistant Ministers till the formation of a Cabinet by the Generalissimo.

V. Lvov.

Petroorad, August 26, 1917.

As soon as he began to write, my last doubt disappeared. I had only one desire, one overmastering impulse: to check the madness at the outset, not giving it time to blaze up, and preventing the possible breaking-out of its partisans in Petrograd itself. All that had previously occurred—the activity of various organizations, the commotion around the Conference in Moseow, the campaign in the Press, reports concerning conspiracies, the behaviour of individual politicians, the series of ultimatums sent to me by Headquarters, Aladin's visit to Prince G. E. Lvov, Kornilov's recent telegram supporting the railwaymen in their impossible demands, the insistence that Petrograd army should be handed over to Headquarters-all, all instantly shone clear in a very brilliant light and merged into one clear picture. The double game was manifest.

Certainly I could not then prove every point, but I saw everything with extraordinary clarity.

In those instants while Lvov was writing, my brain worked intensely. It was necessary to prove at once the formal connection between Lvov and Kornilov so clearly that the Provisional Government would be able to take resolute measures that very evening. It was essential to make Lvov commit himself, by making him repeat in the presence of a third person all his conversation with me. I felt I must act thus, and in no other way.

. . . Meantime, Lvov finished writing, and giving me the document, said, "That is very good; now everything will end peacefully. People there think it very important that the powers of the Provisional Government should be transferred legally. Well, and as for you," he concluded, "will you go to Headquarters?"

I do not know why, but this question stabbed me, put me on my guard, and almost involuntarily I replied, "Certainly not. Do you really think that I can be Minister of Justice under Kornilov?"

Here something strange happened.

Lvov said this excitedly.

Lvov said this excitedly.

We then "decided" that Kornilov should learn by telegraph of my resignation, and that I should not go to Headquarters.

"And what will happen, V. N.," I said, "if you are mistaken, or if they have played a practical jok" on you? What position will you be in then? You know, what you have written is very serious."

Lyov began energetically to prove that it was not a mistake, that it could not be a joke, that it was indeed a very serious matter, and that "General Kornilov would never take back his words"

At that moment the idea came into my head that I would get direct confirmation from Kornilov himself on the direct telegraphic line Lvov jumped at the suggestion, and we arranged that we should meet at eight o'clock at the house of the War Minister to speak together to Kornilov on

the direct telegraph

Lvov had come to me a few minutes after five o'clock, and he left, as far as I remember, after seven Nearly an hour was left before we were to meet at the War Minister's house. As he went out, at the door of my room Lvov met Virubov, who was coming to me. After I had acquainted the latter with what had happened, and asked him to stay with me, I sent my aide de eamp to arrange for a direct line, and to summon to me at my Palace at nine o'clock in the evening the Assistant Chief of the Militia Staff (Balavinsky) and the Assistant to the Commander of the Military District (Captain Kuzmin)

At eight o'clock in the evening I went with Virubov to the telegraph Everything was ready Kornlov was waiting at the other end of the hie Lvov was not yet there. We tried to ring him up it his house, but there was no reply Kornlov writed in the telegraph for twenty to twenty-five minutes. I decided to speak alone, as the chiracter of the conversation mide it indifferent whether only one or both of us were there, the subject had been agreed upon beforehand. I must confusive hind imparantly both Virubov and I were still hoping that General Kornlov would ask in utter bewilderment. "What is there for me to corroborate? Which Lvov?" But the hope was not realized.

Here is the full conversation as recorded by the Hughes tape machine.

THE CONVERSATION BY THE HUGHES TAPE MACHINE OF THE PRIME MINISTER (KERENSKY) WITH THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF (GENERAL KORNILOV). Italies and figures are partly mine.

(1) "Good day, General. V. N. Lvov and Kerensky at the apparatus. We beg you to confirm the statement that Kerensky is to act according to the communication made to him by V. N."

"Good day, Alexander Feodorovitch; good day, V. N. Confirming again the description I gave V. N. of the present situation of the country and the army as it appears to me, I declare again that the events of the past days and of those that I can sec coming imperatively demand a definite decision in the shortest possible time."

(2) "I, V. N., ask you whether it is necessary to act on that definite decision which you asked me to communicate privately to Kerensky, as he is hesitating to give his full confidence without your personal confirmation."

"Yes, I confirm that I asked you to convey to Alexander Feodorovitch my urgent demand that he should come to Mohilev."

(3) "I, Alexander Feodorovitch, understand your answer as confirmation of the words conveyed to me by V. N. To do that to-day and start from me by V. N. To do mat to any and start from here is impossible. I hope to start to-morrow. Is it necessary for Savinkov to go?"

"Is beg urgently that Boris Victorovitch shall come with you. Everything I said to V. N. refers in equal degree to Savinkov. I beg you carnestly not to put off your departure later than to-morrow. Believe me, only my recognition of

it was indeed a very serious matter, and that "General Kornilov would never take back his words."

At that moment the idea came into my head that I would get direct confirmation from Kornilov himself on the direct telegraphic line. Lvov jumped at the suggestion, and we arranged that we should meet at eight o'clock at the house of the War Minister to speak together to Kornilov on the direct telegraph.

Lvov had come to me a few minutes after five o'clock, and he left, as far as I remember, after seven. Nearly an hour was left before we were to meet at the War Minister's house. As he went out, at the door of my room Lvov met Virubov, who was coming to me. After I had acquainted the latter with what had happened, and asked him to stay with me, I sent my aide-de-camp to arrange for a direct line, and to summon to me at my Palace at nine o'clock in the evening the Assistant Chief of the Militia Staff (Balavinsky) and the Assistant to the Commander of the Military District (Captain Kuzmin).

At eight o'clock in the evening I went with Virubov to the telegraph. Everything was ready. Kornilov was waiting at the other end of the line. Lvov was not yet there. We tried to ring him up at his house, but there was no reply. Kornilov waited at the telegraph for twenty to twenty-five windtes. I decided to speak alone, as the character of the conversation made it indifferent whether only one or both of us were there; the subject had been agreed upon beforehand. I must confess that apparently both Virubov and I were still hoping that General Kornilov would ask in utter hewilderment: "What is there for me to corroborate? Which Lvov?" But the hope was not realized.

Here is the full conversation as recorded by the Hughes tape machine.

THE CONVERSATION BY THE HUGHES TAPE
MACHINE OF THE PRIME MINISTER (KERENSKY)
WITH THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF (GENERAL KORNILOV). Italics and figures are partly mine.

(1) "Good day, General. V. N. Lvov and Kerensky at the apparatus. We beg you to confirm the statement that Kerensky is to act according to the communication made to him by V. N."

"Good day, Alexander Feodorovitch; good day, V. N. Confirming again the description I gave V. N. of the present situation of the country and the army as it appears to me, I declare again that the events of the past days and of those that I can see coming imperatively demand a definite decision in the shortest possible time."

(2) "I, V. N., ask you whether it is necessary to act on that definite decision which you asked me to communicate privately to Kerensky, as he is hesitating to give his full confidence without your personal confirmation."

"Yes, I confirm that I asked you to convey to

"Yes, I confirm that I asked you to convey to Alexander Feodorovitch my urgent demand that he should come to Mohilev."

he should come to Mohilev."

(3) "I, Alexander Feodorovitch, understand your answer as confirmation of the words conveyed to me by V. N. To do that to-day and start from here is impossible. I hope to start to-morrow. Is it necessary for Savinkov to go?"

"I beg urgently that Boris Victorovitch shall come with you. Everything I said to V. N. refers in equal degree to Savinkov. I beg you carnestly not to put off your departure later than to-morrow. Believe me, only my recognition of the responsibility of the moment urges me to persist in my request."

(4) "Shall we come only in case of an outbreak, of which there are rumours, or in any case?"

"In any case."

"Good day. Soon we shall see each other." Good-day."

The above is a classical specimen of a "code" conversation in which the one who answers understands from half a word the one who questions. because the subject of the conversation is known to them both. For instance, take the first and second answers, "Confirming again," etc., where everything is puzzling to the outsider and clear only to the initiated, who knows the real point of the dialogue. There is not a single leading question, not a single question whence one could gather what is already known by the questioner about the subject of his interrogation. Nevertheless the answers were precisely what were expected. They were in exact accordance with V. Lvov's communication to me, especially the second and third.

This conversation yielded more than could have been expected; it not only confirmed V. Lvov's authority to speak directly on behalf of Kornilov, but also verified the accuracy with which Lvov had passed on to me Kornilov's words. . . .

It was now necessary to strengthen this evidence by the repetition in the presence of a third person of my "private" conversation with Lvov.

We went back to the Winter Palace. On our way a scene occurred which is mentioned later in the evidence. On my return to my study, the conversation with Lvov was repeated. S. A. Balavinsky, at that time present in my room, gave the following account of it next day, August 27th, to the examining magistrate, among other evidence.

"I was in M. Kerensky's cabinet and wanted to leave in view of his approaching interview with Lvov, but Kerensky asked me to remain, and I Lvov, but Kerensky asked me to remain, and I stayed in the room all through the conversation. Kerensky had brought with him two documents. At the very beginning Kerensky read to Lvov the tape from the telegraph to Headquarters containing the Kerensky-Kornilov conversation, the same tape that you now produce before me " (they showed the witness the tape produced by Kerensky at the examination), "and Lvov confirmed the accuracy of the conversation recorded on the tape.

"Then A. F. Kerensky read aloud to Lvov those notes in Lvov's own handwriting which you show me now, and he confirmed the accuracy of those notes, certifying that every proposal in those notes had been made by Kornilov himself. Further, V. N. Lvov said that the general opinion of the people and of everybody at Headquarters was so strongly against Kerensky and the Provisional Government, that General Kornilov could not answer for A. F. Kerensky's personal safety in answer for A. F. Kerensky's personal safety in any place in Russia, and that was why it was necessary that A. F. Kerensky and Savinkov should go to Headquarters, and Lvov privately gave Kerensky friendly advice to accept and Kerensky to fulfil Kornilov's conditions. Advising Kerensky to fulfil Kornilov's demands, V. N. Lvov said that General Kornilov offered in the Cabinet he was forming the portfolio of Minister of Justice to Kerensky, while Savınkov was to have the Ministry of War and, as it seemed to me, the Ministry of Marine.

"In his conversation with Lvov, Kerensky

several times returned to the same question: according to the accurate information he had received, there would not be a Bolshevik outbreak on August 27th; what then were the reason and motive that made General Kornilov say it was imperative for Kerensky and Savinkov to go to Headquarters? But to this question Lvov made no answer. In his conversation Lvov mentioned that he had not slept for four nights, and that he felt very tired, and he asked Kerensky to come to a decision quickly.

"I did not know previously with whom Kerensky, who had just returned, was going to talk, and while witnessing the conversation between Kerensky and

Lvov, I was not seen by the latter." 1

After this conversation, which took place about ten o'clock in the evening, V. Lvov was put under arrest. . . . The liquidation of the rebellion began.

§ 18.

Now comes the question: had I not the right, after all that had happened on August 26th between five and ten o'clock in the evening, to declare to the population :-

"On August 26th General Kornilov sent V: Lvov, member of the Duma, with a demand for the handing over of the whole civil and military power of the Provisional Government, so that he might at his own discretion form a new Government to rule the country. That Lvov, member of the Duma, possessed full authority to make this proposition

'I This was one of the most important depositions in the Kornilov affair, and although almost the first, it was not printed in a single one of the hosts of newspapers which filled their columns with "truth" about this matter.

PRELUDE TO BOLSHEVISM 171

not only to "start," but "to do that" I to-day was impossible, etc.

In one word, all the text on the tape left no doubt whatever that General Kornilov did not dare to tell the Commission of Inquiry the truth, and if General Kornilov only confirmed his invitation to me to come to Headquarters, why was it that "after this conversation," Prince Trubetzkoy tells us, "a sigh of relief came from Kornilov's breast, and on my question: 'Then the Provisional Government will meet you in everything?' he said: 'Yes.'" Why?
So it was not a "lie" when I declared that General Kornilov had sent Lyov to me with something.

Government I asked him to contey my insistent appeal that you should come to Headquarters to take some definite decision, and I added to that, that in view of the accurate information in that, that in view of the accurate information my possession concerning a Bolshevik rising in Petrograd, I considered the position extremely serious, and in particular I believed that you and Kerensky's presence in Petrograd was very dangerous for both of you, and for that reason I offered you to come to Headquarters, guaranteeing by my word of honour your absolute safety" Is it not more than obvious that Lvov's rendering it not more than obvious that Livov's rendering entirely coincides with the actual thoughts of General Kornilov? Moreover, the "apprehension" of Livov for my life strangely coincides with the promises of "safety" of the General Why, however, should the Commander-in-Chief have to pledge his "word of honour" that the Prime Minister, the Supreme Chief of the State, will remain alive if he comes to the Commander in-Chief. Meediunchers at his expensivition? Chief's Headquarters at his own invitation?

That which had taken place at Headquarters

after the conversation carried on by means of the Hughes tape machine and "the sigh of relief" confirms once more that Lvov was not indulging in any faney of his imagination when he made his demands to me, to be immediately fulfilled ("within the shortest possible time," according to General Kornilov's Hughes' communication) "The Commander in Chief" (so Prince Trubetz-

"The Commander in Chief" (so Prince Trubetz-key continues his narration), "assuming that he had come to a complete understanding in principle with the Prime Minister, gave orders confirming orders previously given by him for the dispatch to Petrograd of the necessary troops. At the same time he sent telegrams to certain prominent political men inviting them to come to his Head-

not only to "start," but "to do that" 1 to-day was impossible, etc.

In one word, all the text on the tape left no doubt whatever that General Kornilov did not dare to tell the Commission of Inquiry the truth, and if General Kornilov only confirmed his invitation to me to come to Headquarters, why was it that "after this conversation," Prince Trubetzkoy tells us, "a sigh of relief came from Kornilov's breast, and on my question: 'Then the Provisional Government will meet you in everything?' he said: 'Yes,'" Why?

So it was not a "lie" when I declared that General Kornilov had sent Lyov to me with something.

Also it was not a "lie" when I declared that this something was the "demand" for my transference of the full power of the Provisional Government to General Kornilov, and that Lvov came to me on this mission. "Events demand quite definite decision in the shortest possible time," said Kornilov on the direct line. Moreover, next day, in conversation with Savinkov on the same subject, Kornilov said: "After your departure? I received two alarming communications about the state of affairs at the front and at the rear" (and I may add that Krimov was then already moving on Petrograd). "I told Lvov it was my profound conviction that the only solution was to be found in the establishment of a Dictatorship and the proclamation of martial law throughout the country. I asked V. Lvov to tell Kerensky and you that I considered it absolutely imperative that you and Kerensky should take a share in the

The italies everywhere are mine.

Between Savinkov's departure from G.H.Q. and Lvov's visit to Kornilov five or six hours passed.

Government. I asked him to convey my insistent appeal that you should come to Headquarters to take some definite decision, and I added to that, that in view of the accurate information in my possession concerning a Bolshevik rising in my possession concerning a hoisneylk rising in Petrograd, I considered the position extremely serious, and in particular I believed that your and Kerensky's presence in Petrograd was very dangerous for both of you, and for that reason I offered you to come to Headquarters, guaranteeing by my word of honour your absolute safety." Is it not more than obvious that Lvov's rendering it not more than obvious that Lvov's rendering entirely coincides with the actual thoughts of General Kornilov? Moreover, the "apprehension" of Lvov for my life strangely coincides with the promises of "safety" of the General. Why, however, should the Commander-in-Chief have to pledge his "word of honour" that the Prime Minister, the Supreme Chief of the State, will remain alive if he comes to the Commander-in-Chief. Meedgeursters at his own justicious? Chief's Headquarters at his own invitation?

That which had taken place at Headquarters after the conversation earried on by means of the Hughes tape machine and "the sigh of relief" confirms once more that Lvov was not indulging in any fancy of his imagination when he made his demands to me, to be immediately fulfilled (" within demands to me, to be immediately fulfilled ("within the shortest possible time," according to General Kornilov's Hughes' communication).

"The Commander-in-Chief" (so Prince Trubetz-koy continues his narration), "assuming that he had come to a complete understanding in principle with the Prime Minister, gave orders confirming orders' previously given by him for the dispatch to Petrograd of the necessary troops. At the same time he sent telegrams to certain prominent political men inviting them to come to his Headquarters to discuss the situation that had arisen, with a view to induce them, together with some members of the Provisional Government (Kerensky and Savinkov), to form a new Cabinet, which, in General Kornilov's opinion, was to have carried out a strictly democratic program, consolidating out a strictly democratic program, consonauting the people's liberty and having for its main feature the solution of the agranan question." I have to add that already, about a fortnight previous to August 26th, a certain professor arrived from Moscow at Headquarters for "conversations" upon the agrarian question, and by August 26th a full agrarian law or manifesto was already drafted

It appears therefore that at the time of the Moseow Conference General Kornilov was already taking an interest not only in discussions of financial and international questions and had conversations not only with railway men

The picture therefore is perfectly clear On August 28th there would have been assembled in Headquarters, with the Commander in Chief, "the elders of the nation" and the Prime Minister with the War Minister, who have " agreed" to hand over the power to General Kornslov, whilst at Petrograd there would have been the troops of Krimov, the "beheaded" Provisional Government, the "Bolshevil majority' of the Soviets exercising pressure on that Government, and have ceased to exist General Alexanov, perfectly well informed of the intentions of the conspirators, asserts in the same confidential letter to Miliukov that Kornilov's movement "was directed solely against the persons who one after the other joined the Ministry and quickly left it," that is to say, against the Pro visional Government of that time, and acknowledges that it was precisely for that purpose that the 3rd

The Provisional Government would thus "loyally"

Cavalry Corps was moving on Petrograd.

To what extent by the eve of August 26th everything had been prepared and arranged at Head-quarters is shown by the following characteristic conversation of Kornilov with the same Prince Trubetzkoy: "To my question why Kornilov insists on the participation of Kerensky and Savinkov in the Cabinet (consequently there were some who did not insist!) I received the reply: 'The new Government will be compelled by the force of eircumstances to take some very stringent measures, and I desire that these measures should not be more stringent than are required. Moreover, democraev should see and know that it is not being deprived of its favourite leaders and most precious conquests." This statement of motives does not err on the side of bashfulness, and is quite sufficiently frank.

I think that no one who knows and has thought over the Kornilov affair can deny that the intentions of the Kornilov group towards the Provisional Government as such were perfectly definite; that the Provisional Government was to yield to the will of the Dietator; that no kind of "misunderstanding" as regards the Provisional Government as a whole existed at Headquarters; that on August 28th the fatal question would have been settled as to the purpose for which Headquarters troops were being moved on Petrograd; that Lvov indeed caused, whether wishing it or not, the mine that had been prepared for the Provisional Government to explode two days before the appointed time.

§ 19.

The participators in the rebellion themselves did not deny, and do not deny, their intentions 12

towards the Provisional Government, they did not deny it even when they declared the words of the Prime Minister to be "an absolute lie" It is necessary to read very earcfully the first limes of the appeal or manifesto of the Commander in Chief to the "people of Russia" m order to understand their true meaning and to appreciate the skill of the author of the appeal-Zavorko Here are these lines "Telegram No 4163 of the Prime Minister is absolute lie in the whole of its first part, it was not I who sent the member of the Duma, V Lvov, to the Provisional Government, but Lvov came to me as an envoy of the Prime Minister, as Aladin, another member of the Duma, can witness And so a great act of provocation was committed, which placed at stake the fate of the country. How can the direct meaning of these lines be understood on comparing them with my telegram No 4163? There the Prime Minister states (1) "Livov came to me on behalf of General Kornilov (2) He called upon the Provisional Government to hand over the power the rrovisional Government to hand over the power to Kornilov (3) Kornilov confirmed that he had given Lvov the necessary authorization" "All that is an absolute he," replies the Kornilov mannesto, whence the simple minded reader will manuesto, whence the simple minuted reader win conclude (1) that Lvov did not come at all to Kerensky, (2) that he did not communicate any demands to the Provisional Government, (3) that accordingly Kornilov was not in a position to confirm that Lvov was acting with due authority More than that, the simple minded reader will infer that not only did nothing of the kind take place, but that it was all the other way about Lvov was Kerensky's envoy who came to Kornilov That undoubtedly is the direct meaning of that part of Kornilov's appeal or statement which was

KERENSKY'S ALLEGED COMPLICITY 179

communicated in the night of August 27th-28th on all railway lines to "all persons in authority" and to the "railway committees" These are words which clearly reveal the distinct intention, that, to put it vulgarly, all those should be "taken in" by surprise in whose chest, in the words of the same statement, "a Russian heart is beating, and who believe in God and in the temples." The people had to be taken in and to respond before they would have had time to understand and to learn the truth But this bold demagogie text adapted for circulation in the masses has a different, real meaning. which can be understood only by a very thoughtful or well informed reader Yes, I did make demands on the Provisional Government, I don't deny it, but I made those demands with the knowledge of the Prime Minister It was he who first sent Lvov to me for negotiations, it was Kerensky who was "provoking" me That is the real meaning
It was then that the carnival of lies was started. Kerensky was insincere and betrayed Kornilovthat is the calumny of the Right Kerensky is a "Kornilovite," a counter revolutionary, he meant to betray democracy, that was the shameful lie, one regrets to say, not of the Bolshevik demagogues alone "Kercnsky's participation is beyond every doubt", thus General Alexeiev, as if summing up the various legends Even if that had been so, nevertheless that in which I participated would remain a crime, there would only have been one eriminal more But what evidence is there of my participation? There is the eircumstantial cyidence-the calling out of the 3rd Cavalry Corps (which already has been referred to) in connection with certain actions and statements of Savinkov, the behaviour at Head quarters of Filononko (to him I will refer later), and finally the mission of Lyov.

It seems to me that the above sufficiently demonstrates the absurdity of this last proof of the elumsy invention of the conspirators. In their hurry they overlooked even this simplest consideration. Supposing, indeed, that through Savinkov and Filonenko I was in agreement with Kornilov, why should I at the last moment "introduce into the business" an outsider who, moreover, since he ceased to be a member of the Provisional Government, was no friend of mine?

How, then, stood matters in reality, and how did it come about that on the evening of August 26th V. N Lyov was in my room? This is how it happened. V. N. Lvov, having come to take part at the Moscow Conference, met at the National Hotel (the Moscow headquarters of Zavoiko and Aladin) an old friend, a certain Dobinsky, a member of the Faceutive Committee of the Union of Knights of St. George, a fellow officer of Krimov, and at that time a frequent visitor at Headquarters Dobrinsky introduced Lvov to Aladin, and they both to some extent initiated Lyoy into their plans At that time (immediately after the Moscow Conference), feverish preparations went on, and a man was urgently required for a special task. to contrive to see me otherwise than through the usual channels of our communications with Headquarters (through Savmkov or Baranovsky). Aladin knew by his own experience that men of his kind have no chance of being admitted to me personally. An attempt of the same Aladin to obtain an interview with me through an interview wi mediary fell through: Prince G. E Lvov, to whom Aladin applied a short time before V N Lvov's arrival, asking the Prince to obtain my consent to see him (Aladin) on a matter of exceptional importance, refused Aladin's request. When leaving Prince Lvov, Aladin nevertheless took the precaution to mention that for so many (I do not remember how many) days he would wait for a decision at the National Hotel, and in the course of his conversation with Prince Lvov. Aladin emphasized the fact that he came from Headquarters. Aladin did not, however, receive any message, and thereupon V. N. Lvov was sent, who as a member of the Duma and former member of the Provisional Government had naturally a right to be received by me. The following particulars are relevant and very interesting. Between August 16th and 21st Aladin had been to Prince Lvov. On August 17th Dobrinsky returned from Mohilev with the news that "Headquarters have decided to insist on reforms" and told it to V. N. Lvov. On August 21st, Dobrinsky, as Aladin put it, "introduces" Lyov to Aladin, and Lyov there and then informs Aladin that he will go to Petrograd to Kerensky and as his "personal friend" will insist on the necessity of forming a Ministry that will enjoy general confidence. On August 21st Lvov leaves Moseow to see me; on August 23rd he returns to Moseow. At the same National Hotel, in Dobrinsky's presence, Lvov informs Aladin that Kerensky has agreed to enter into negotiations with Headquarters. It is true that Lyov's statement before his departure for Petrograd to see me (as the same Aladın had put it) hardly agrees with what he said about Headquarters after he saw me. But that does not make any difference to Mr. Aladin. On the same day, August 23rd, Lvov and Dobrinsky both hurry back to Headquarters with a letter from Aladin to Zavoiko,

On August 21th Aladın goes to Headquarters On the evening of that day General Kornilov receives Lvov They speak at first without anybody else being present, but afterwards, in the presence of "the orderly officer Zavoiko, I (General Kornilov) confirmed to Lvov the essential points of my statements" After his interview with Kornilov, Lvov spends most of the night with Zavoiko, Aladin, Radionov (if I remember rightly, the author of "Our Crime") and Company

On August 26th Lvov hurnes to Petrograd, and almost staight from the train goes to my waiting room A telegram from Headquarters follows, addressed "Winter Palace, Kerensky for Lvov On your return, find and bring Rodzianko—Dobrinsky" Alas! that wire arrived when Lvov was already under arrest

Thus since August 21st (the day when he was "introduced" to Aladin) Lvov did not spare himself and had no rest. It was not without reason himself and had no rest. It was not without reason that in speaking to me he complained that he had not slept for four nights. Was he not peculiar, my "envoy"? He made journeys not going from me, but coming to me—once from Moseow, sent by Aladin and Dobrinsky, another time from Mohilev, where he was spending his time in the company of Kornilov, Zavoiko, and again with Dobrinsky and Aladin

After that, who could testify better than Aladın to all those "who believe in God and the temples" that Lyov was "my envoy" and that everything else is "absolute he"?

I have taken the trouble to give the details of Lvov's movements during the relevant days, together with some explanatory extracts by the persons themselves concerned, so that the clumsy cfforts of the conspirators to prevent the truth

KERENSKY'S ALLEGED COMPLICITY 183

eoming out should be perfectly clear to every reader. What was Lvov's position in that crowd, and to what extent he was initiated into their plans, I have not yet succeeded in ascertaining. It seems, however, fairly certain that he was not one of the chief conspirators, but was one of the men whom the principals used for such services as they were supposed to be fit for

The statement of the outside observer, Prince Trubetzkoy, well illustrates my surmise "When I heard that V Lvov had visited Kornilov, I asked one of the aides de eamp 'Is Kornilov asked one of the aides de eamp 1s Kornilov aware that Lvov is not a very bright intellect? The aide de eamp smiled and said, 'Everybody knows that, but General Kornilov said that any how he is capable of delivering a message given to him, and moreover, until quite recently he was a member of Kerensky's Cabinet'." "He is capable of delivering a message given to him "—that is the worth of Lvov as weighed at Headquarters He was treated accordingly First he was sent to me with demands, and when the game failed, to me with demands, and when the game failed, an offer "from me to Kormlov" was put into his (Lvov's) mouth—"that Kormlov should aeeept the dictatorship which should be proclaimed by the present Provisional Government" (General Kormlov's words to Savinkov on August 27th, communicated by the Hughes apparatus) Here we see once more a complete agreement of Lvov's version with what General Kormlov catually did care on the gest of Archive Lyoy's version with what General Kormlov actually did say on the 26th of August in the eyening Lyov was insisting to me on the importance of the "lawful" transfer of power And what is of especial importance, these words of Kornilov through the Hughes apparatus completely bear out the fundamental point 2 of Lyoy's written ultimatum

V. Lvov himself, after a series of his muddled semi-truthful or not entirely mendacious statements, although he affirmed in his last deposition (which was entirely directed against myself) that I gave him a commission, admitted, however, that it was not to make any offers or proposals on my behalf, but to find out the desires of others—the desires of certain political groups, including that of Headquarters.

It must be said that later, when giving evidence before the Commission of Inquiry, General Kornilov, who knew by that time that a third person heard my apparently private conversation with Lvov, has transformed Lvov from a "proposer" into an "inquirer," and takes the initiative as to the dictatorship upon himself.

"V. Lvov told me on behalf of Kerensky that if in my opinion Kerensky's continuation in office deprives the Government of the necessary strength and firmness, Kerensky is prepared to leave the Provisional Government. If Kerensky can count on support he is willing to remain. To that, I, having stated briefly the general position of alfairs in the country and in the army, declared that the only way of helping the grave state of affairs, as I am profoundly convinced, is a dictatorship and the immediate proclamation of martial law throughout Russia." (Compare point 1 of Korninilov's reply through the Hughes apparatus on August 26th.) "I stated that personally I am not after power and am prepared to obey immediately the man who will be made dictator. Lvov stated that such a decision is not impossible; that, in view of the difficult general situation of the country, the Provisional Government, as at present constituted, will of itself come to the decision of the necessity for the appointment of a dictator, and it is quite possible that I will be chosen to accept that appointment." What a change, thank God!

KERENSKY'S ALLEGED COMPLICITY 185

The story of my sending an envoy to Head-quarters with a most humble request, "come and lord over us," is simply a desperate attempt of men who have lost their heads after having been caught red-handed, and now try to hide behind other people's backs and to obliterate all their own traces—and who are not very particular as to their methods. Unfortunately, this was not by any means the only attempt of the kind. On the same day when the proclamation was sent out containing the absolute he about the "great provocation," General Lukomsky sent me a telegram (No. 6406) in which he wrote, inter alia, that General Kornlov had taken his "final decision" after the "arrival of Savinkov and Lvov, who made General Kornilov a proposal on your behalf to the same effect . . and in accordance with your proposal, he has given final orders which it is now too late to countermand." Having read the telegram, Savinkov immediately handed me a statement in writing. That statement was immediately landed by me to the Provisional Government, from whom it was sent to the Chairman of the Commission of Inquiry, for which reason I can only quote it from memory. "Having become acquainted with the reference to myself contained in the telegram of General Lukomsky, No. 6106, dated August 27th, I state that it is a libel. No political statements whatsoever were made or could have been made by me on your behalf made or could have been made by me on your behalf to General Kornilov.—(Signed) SAVINKOV, August 27, 1917." Savinkov was indignant over that libel, and expressed his anger by the direct wire to General Kornilov, repeating that the words of General Lukomsky concerning him, Savinkov, were a libel. To which immediately the only pos-sible reply was made—that Lukomsky's telegram referred only to what Savinkov had said in the presence of General Lukomsky, General Romanovsky and Colonel Baranovsky on sending troops at the disposal of the Provisional Government and the proclamation of martial law.

This time the attempt failed at once. It is to be regretted that the conversation with Lvov took place cither without the presence of anybody else or in the presence of such a "witness" as Zavoiko. It is accordingly extraordinarily difficult to establish the truth here. Nor was it cult to establish the truth here. Nor was it by accident or chance that General Lukomsky mentioned Lvov and Savinkov together. They both saw me on August 22nd at Petrograd. Both left the capital the same evening—Lvov for Moscow and Savinkov for Mohilev; they were both at Mohilev on August 24th—Savinkov was leaving and Lvov had just arrived. It may be asked—why should I have chosen for a "conspiracy" the roundabout way via Moseow-Lvov and ignored the more direct and convenient means of communication—Savinkov, who, moreover, could have much more easily and without being observed by much more easily and without being observed by any outsiders or third parties have had a strictly private tête-d-tête conversation with Kornilov.]

§ 20.

Chairman.—On August 26th, when Lvov appeared here, did he first report himself through somebody, or did he suddenly appear? Further, did any information reach you that day as to Lvov spreading some extraordinary rumours over the city?

Kerensky.—To my regret I learnt of this only later, after Lvov had already left me. Before Lvov came I had with me the Supreme Commissary of Turkestan with a most important report. As soon as he left me, Lvov came in. . . . Who told me? . . . One of my men told me that Lyov was seen in a fairly excited state. . . . Oh yes, another man, who had spoken to Lvov just prior to my seeing him, afterwards told me that, not only in the street but even here at the Winter Palace, Lvov was speaking in very strong terms. I do not recollect who it was who told me.

Chairman.—Then, Lvov's report. How did he introduce it? What motive did he disclose? Did he connect it with any previous visit to you, or did he speak as if it were an entirely new, different matter ?

Kerensky.—That's it. He was quite a different man. All the past had been wiped out, as it were. Chairman .- So this occasion was entirely unconnected with what preceded it . . .

Kerensky.—Yes. I have already stated that I met him with the words, "Here you are again with your affair," and he replied, "No, circumstances have changed," or something to that effect. This time there was only one topic of conversation. I must hand over my office and quit. There was no mention of any "introduction of new blood" into the Provisional Government or of any "ex-tension" of its basis. . . I remain firmly con-vinced, and I expressed this conviction at the time, that this was perhaps the only evening when Lvov was sincere, and being aware of what was both was structe, and being aware of what was to come, was genuinely desirous of saving me from something. Whether his conscience raised its voice, or whether he became frightened, makes no difference, I was particularly confirmed in that conviction by our conversation in the motorcar (on the way from the direct wire station to the Winter Palace), when, in V. V. Virubov's' presence, I purposely told V. N. Lvov that "I have changed my mind and will go to Headquarters." I said that to test him. Thereupon he became greatly excited, and with his hand on his heart implored me: "May God prevent you from doing that. For God's sake don't go to Headquarters; you'd be lost there."

[When on August 30th, being under arrest, Lvov learnt of the complete failure of the Kornilov attempt, he sent me a note: "I congratulate you from the bottom of my heart. I am glad that I saved you out of Kornilov's hands. Yours, V. Lvov. 30th of August." I handed that note too to the Chairman of the Commission of Inquiry and am writing from memory, but I am quite certain of its general tenor.]

Chairman.—Did he tell you any details, why and how—or did he merely put an ultimatum before you?

Kerensky.-An ultimatum. He said, "I am instructed by General Kornilov."

Chairman .- Did he tell you in detail, did he have some information?

Kerensky.—No, he only stated the points. He obviously knew them very well indeed, for he stated them correctly both verbally and in writing: the proclamation of martial law, the handing over of the power and the resignation, and point 4 (for myself and Savinkov only): immediate departure for Headquarters. That is why I wished to fix point 4, which did not appear on paper, by the Hughes tape machine. From my point of view, the almost decisive words of our conversation by the Hughes tape machine were in my question: "Is Savinkov wanted?" Lvov told me that Kornilov insisted equally on the immediate arrival both of myself and of Savinkov. That is why I put the question whether the suggestion as to the immediate journey to Headquarters concerned myself only or both myself and Savinkov. A categoric confirmation—"Savinkov also"—and then the statement that only the "sense of responsibility" compelled him "so insistently to demand," made it perfectly clear to me that Lvov was au courant of the whole affair.

Chairman.-Did Virubov sec that note?

Kerensky.—I handed it to him and said: "Read."
Chairman.—What impression did it make on Virubov?

Kerensky.—He said, "What is to be done?" I told him what steps I was taking. Later in the evening Lvov was arrested.

Chairman.—So Lvov was not there at the time?

Kerensky.—Lvov went out, Virubov came in,

Reference,—Lyov Went Out, Virilbov came in. I had asked Virubov to be in good time for eight o'clock p.m. at the direct wire in the house of the War Minister. Afterwards Balavinsky and Kuzmin, the Deputy Commander of the Petrograd Military District, were asked to attend. In a word, I made all the preparation necessary duly to establish "the fact."

Raupakh.—So Lyoy set out those points not as an opinion of Korniloy, not as an advice, but as a demand, an ultimatum?

Kerensky.—There was no question of any opinions; it was a demand, an ultimatum. A further point of the communication over the Hughes tape to which I attached the greatest importance was the reply to my question whether our arrival was desirable only in ease the Bolsheviks moved. When I was speaking to Livor I was trying to find out whether the journey was thought desirable only nease of danger from the Bolsheviks or in any ease I wished to find out whether they really apprehended the Bolsheviks, or if that was merely a pretext I put the question to Livor several times "Is all that required if the Bolsheviks really will aet, or am I to go m any case, Bolsheviks or no Bolsheviks?" The reply was, "Just the same" I put the same question to Kornilov I do not remember how it was on the tape

Raupakh—"Is it necessary for me to come

Kerensky—"Only in the event of the Bolshevik action or in any event?" Reply "In any event" Thus the two men Kornilov and Lvov, hundreds of miles away from each other and not being aware what the other was saying, gave the same replies to the same questions. And then a third time, when I and Lvov were returning from the direct wire, I put the same question in Bala

vinsky's presence

Chairman -To Lvov ?

Kerensky—Yes Whether I was to leave in any event or only in ease the Bolsheviks acted I myself hnew for certain that on August 27th there would not be any move by the Bolsheviks Charman—So that you decided to have Lvov

Charman —So that you decided to have Lvov arrested after your conversation with Kornilov and in connection with that imminent journey?

Kerensky—No, it was in connection with my growing conviction that this man was a party to something or knew something, and that he was spealing the truth. He several times, especially during the first conversation with me, used the plural "we"

Chairman -To whom then, and in what order of sequence, did you tell of that episode with Lvov and of your conversation with Kornilov?

Krokhmal.-I wish to ask how that document was obtained.

Kerensky.—Oh, it was obtained perfectly simply. I have already referred to it at the first interrogation. Lvov had stated it all verbally and demanded of me categorical compliance. I finally told him: "You understand yourself, Vladimir Nikolayevitch, that if I go before the Provisional Government and make that sort of statement, still no one will believe me, but will think I am mad, or they will first send to find out and verify whether Kornilov did make such a proposal to me, and I shall find myself in the position of a fool. What right have I to place such proposals before the Provisional Government? I know you and trust you, but I cannot speak without evidence." "No, I will guarantee it." "If you will guarantee it, please write it down." "With pleasure, because, as you know, I never say anything that is not true." So he wrote it down.

Raupakh.-Was this before the conversation over the tape?

Kerensky.—It was. I showed these points to Virubov, and thereupon I left, to communicate with Kornilov over the direct wire.

Raupakh.-Lvov was not with you?

Kerensky.—He was late, but he came. As we were going down the staircase he was coming up. It was because of that that I afterwards read to him the whole conversation on the tape, so that he should confirm it.

Raupakh.-Was the conversation carried on in your own name, or in Lvov's name?

Kerensky.—He told me that perhaps he would be a little late, but as Kornilov had already been some twenty minutes at the telegraphic apparatus, I did not wish to wait any longer and put the questions as coming from us both.

Raupakh.—Why did you consider it necessary to speak in the names of both? What cause was there for this? Was it more convenient to earry on the conversation with Kornilov that way?

Kerensky -Because Lvov came to me on behalf of Kornilov. He said that he was acting under the instructions of Kornilov. So it was arranged that we should carry on the conversation jointly. As we were going down and Lvov eame up, he asked me, "Well, Alexander Feodorovitch, have I proved a true friend? I have not deceived you." I said, " You have not."

Raunalh.-That was after the conversation (with Kornilov)?

Kerensky.-Yes And after that we together here.

Raupakh.-Here, in Balavinsky's presence . . .

Kerensky -- Here, in Balavinsky's presence, Lvov repeated all the essential points of our conversation during the day. And above all I attached importance not so much to particular words of Lvov, as to the fact that I should be able to have some one else to witness the excited state of Lvov and to confirm that he considered all that business exceptionally important.

Kolokolov.-And did Lyov know that Balaymsky was there?

Kerensky -He did not.

[Only now when I can pass in review the whole of the campaign which is carried on against me by both the extreme wings who are making capital out of the Kornilov affair, only now do I appreciate the great importance of the fact that on the 26th, in the whirl of events, I was able to see the necessity of making some sort of safeguard for myself. I can imagine what would have happened if my conversation with Lvov, which he thought was quite "private," had not been heard by a living though involuntary witness, a well-known public man.]

CHAPTER III

§ 21.

Chairman.—To whom and in what order of sequence did you communicate Lvov's proposal and the conversation with Kornilov over the tape; and after you had read the tape and the note, were any objections made by any of your colleagues?

Kerensky.—It was like this. We returned from Kerensky.—It was like this. We returned from the apparatus. The second conversation with Lvov took place. Then I ordered his arrest. By that time we were joined, as far as I remember, by Nekrassov, Virubov, Balavinsky; I am not sure whether Terestehenko was there or not. There were a fair number of seats occupied at the table, but I am not quite sure who was there. Savinkov came later.

Chairman.—No one of those gentlemen, having taken eognizance of the tape, had any objections to make to you on the subject?

Kerensky.—I recollect that Savinkov suggested an immediate conversation with Kornilov over the direct wire.

[I also remember very well that I refused that request of Savinkov. I refused it because Savinkov was of opinion that it was the duty of the Provisional Government to use every means for a peaceful settlement of the "conflict," which should remain unknown. I myself was of opinion that it was not a "conflict" between two equal parties, but a crime; it ought emphatically to be settled by peaceful means; not, however, by negotiations with the guilty General, but by the will of the Provisional Government, to which the Commander-in-Chief, who had failed in his trust, should submit immediately. From the moment when my conversation with Kornilov satisfied me as to his plan, nobody and nothing could make me abandon this point of view.

The idea that Lvov "made a mess of it" and that the whole thing was a "misunderstanding" became popular only the next day-August 27th. Savinkov himself was saying to Filonenko over the direct wire on the morning of the 27th: "I regret to say that you are not well informed: General Kornilov confirmed the statements of his envoy in speaking to A F. by the Hughes apparatus The decision has now been taken." And in the evening of the 26th Savinkov suggested sending a telegram to the front to send a certain unit which he knew as being "reliable" to march. on Headquarters. The information that arrived from Headquarters in the night of August 26th—27th could only increase our anxiety. About one o'clock in the morning Filonenko made the one o'clock in the morning Filonenko made the following fairly obscure communication over the Hughes apparatus in his "code" language: that the heights (Kornilov) were changing hands, that gallant generals were going to attack; that a dance was to take place between the Herculcan Pillars (Kerensky and Kornilov), that some great nea were expected to meet at Headquarters, and so on; the one definite conclusion that could be made from those communications was that something extraordinary was going on at Headquarters What was going on can be now put thus: Pending the result of Lvov's mission, Kognlov was discussing in his study the final decision us to the form of the dictatorship Two main schemes were examined, in one Kornilov was to be sole dictator, with the Council of Ministers subordinate to him, in the other a "Council of National Defence" was to be created, with Kornilov at the head, whilst the Council of Ministers were to take their instructions from that "Council of National Defence" The second scheme was approved, and the One Man Dictatorship was rejected By whom 9 By Messrs Zavoiko, Aladin, and Filonenko The honour of bringing about the rejection of the One Man Dictatorship was claimed by Filonenko!

Having settled, with those highly qualified advisers, the form of the Government, Kornilov in the same company makes a list of his Cabinct, discusses details of the programme, etc Finally, having received the communication of my "con sent" to surrender the Provisional Government without a struggle, Kornilov with a sigh of rehef hastily sends telegrams to some favourites—Millukov, Rodzianko, Maklakov, and so on—to come immediately to Headquarters in view of the perilous state of affairs. That was the kind of "misunderstanding" that was going on at Headquarters

Nevertheless, next day, August 27th, after Savnkov's conversation with Kornilov about 6 p m, the version is being spread in Petrograd that Lvov simply "made a mess of it," that a "mis understanding" arose That version finds many energetic supporters The same Savinkov, insisting on Filonenko's leaving Headquarters, was telling him in the morning "Believe me that I am better inforined than you are, and that you have been unaware of many things, just as I was when I was last time at Headquarters" But after his conversation with Kornilov, Savinkov proceeds about 8 pm. to the Winter Palace and insists on the necessity "of attempting to clear up the misunderstanding and of entering into negotiations with General Korinlov." This in spite of the fact that, in the course of that conversation, Kormlov not only stated that he refused to give up the command, but acknowledged that he had sent Lvov to make a statement as to the dictatorship He only explained that that statement was a reply to my proposal What, then, was the misunderstanding that made negotiations desirable? The Commander-in-Cluef of all the netive armies in the field, who informs the Government of an immediate proclamation of his dictatorship, cannot be left at the head of the armies by any Government for one minute, whilst a general who, in these circumstances, refuses to hand over his command is clearly committing the weightiest of crimes against the State The only "misunderstanding," if Kornilov were to be believed, that in the circuinstances could have happened, would be either that I really made such a proposal to him and afterwards repudiated it or that someone had crused General Kornilov to form a mistaken idea of my proposal To those now who literally accepted Kormlov's words and accordingly con-sidered me an accomplee, I say that any negotia tions should have been conducted not with myself, but with the Provisional Government, who should have been asked to order my arrest

Those who supposed that a bone fide error was made by General Kornlov could have held to that supposition until the moment when it was made clear to Kornlov that Lvov did not have and could not have any instructions from me for General Kornlov

In any case, if until August 27th it was possible to believe that General Kornilov was making a bona fide mistake, it was impossible to deny that his action was criminal. Consequently any negotia-tions of the Provisional Government with a man acting criminally were out of the question. It could be submitted that there was reason to treat him mildly on the ground that his error was a mitigating circumstance. This was the sole reason for which I could see my way to listen at all to Savinkov and others in favour of negotiating on August 27th, for I took it that they were assuming a bona fide error of Kornilov. I suggested that they should themselves "negotiate" with General Kormlov; that is to say, I asked them to use all their influence with him to induce him to submit to the Provisional Government before it was too late, before his action had led to serious consequences for himself personally and above all for the State. But it was impossible for me to allow any pourpariers between Kornilov and the Provisional Government. I could not allow even any delay in the taking of the necessary measures against General Kornilov. In my opinion, im-mediate and resolute action alone could prevent further development and save Russia from further bloodshed.

THE "MISUNDERSTANDING" THEORY 199

Obviously, those who genuinely believed the assumption that the whole trouble was caused by Lvov misleading Karnilav could be in favour of pourparlers only up to the morning of August 28th, that is to say, up to the day when Kornilov's proclamation was published concerning the "great provocation" and "Lvov's mission." From that mouent any possibility of doubt had ceased: the malicious intention was wident. It should have been obvious for them that any possibility of pourparlers had disappeared. When Savinkov, towards the morning of August 28th, learnt not only that Kornilov lind refused to hand over his command, but that he lind detained Filoneako and sent the "Savage Division" in the van of the cavalry corps and had appointed Krimov commander of the corps—that is to say, that Kornilov had hroken his promise—even Savinkov understood that "in the circumstances" it was no longer possible to enter into pourpailers with General Kornilov. Next day (August 29th), Savinkov, as Military Governor of Petrograd, issued an appeal to the miniphtunts of the capital which began as follows: "In the perilous hour when the enemy has broken through our front and when Riga has fallen, General Kornilov has attempted to discredit the Provisional Government and the Revolution and has joined the ranks of their enemis"]

Kerensky—In the night, when I read to the Provisional Government both documents (the tape of the conversation with Kormlov and Lvov's "points") one after the other, no objections were raised at all, as far as I can remember.

Chairman—So that thereupon the meeting was ealled for the night of August 26th-27th, when . . Kerensky—The meeting of the Provisional Government had aheady previously been appointed to take place that night. At the meeting I reported all the circumstances very fully—Livov's visit and all subsequent events—Then I made a proposal . . My proposal amounted to ordering General Kormlov to hand over his command, and nothing more

§ 22

Chairman —Was it not suggested by you to the other Ministers or by the Ministers to you that, in view of the circumstances, in view of the revolt which was evident, you should be given special powers—unlimited powers to fight the counter-revolution?

Kerensky.—Yes. I do not remember the exact wording. I do not think that I put it quite that way, but I pointed out that it was necessary that I should have a certain freedom of action. I was of opinion that this was indispensable.

Chairman.—Therefore the Provisional Govern-

Chairman.—Therefore the Provisional Government was dealing already on the night of August 26th-27th with the question of the rebellion of which we are speaking now?

Kerensky.—I do not remember whether the word "rebellion" had been mentioned. We spoke generally of the extremely serious situation, of the obvious act of insubordination by Kornilov, of the attempt to overthrow the Provisional Government.

I forgot to say why "they" wished me to go to Headquarters. Lvov said several times that they thought it of the utmost importance that a lawful transfer of power should take place, that there should be no seizure of power, but that there should be a formal decision by the Provisional Government to transfer it. "They" seemed to lay particular emphasis on that. Lvov at least three times resumed that point, and insisted that they considered it of the utmost importance that the Provisional Government should decide the transfer of power, so that everything should be done in a perfectly legal form.

Rdupakh.—Tell us, please, was not the surrender of their portfolios by the Ministers at that night sitting occasioned by an endeavour to leave you wider powers for combating the rebellion?

Kerenshy.—Yes. The position was so complicated! The mutual relations within the Provisional Government had aheady been rather difficult, while now, under the newly created erreumstances, the necessary steps could hardly be taken rapidly. The Government lacked cohesion and solidarity. The "polarity" between Kokoshkm and Tehernow was found to be particularly embarrassing. They were elements that could hardly act jointly, or even stant logither at such a meaning.

even stay together, at such a moment.

[The powers obtained by me from the Provisional Government on the eve of August 27th for the suppression of General Kornilov's rebellion were thus formulated in my Message to the population, issued on the same date, August 27th: "The issued on the same date, August 27th: "The Provisional Government has found it necessary, for saving the country and the Republican order, to empower me to take prompt and resolute measures for mipping in the bud any attempts to eneroach upon the supreme authority in the State and upon the rights conquered by the Revolution for its citizens. I am taking all the measures for its citizens. I am taking all the measures required for the preservation of order and history in the country." This text confirms that on the night preceding August 27th I did not receive "entire plenitude of authority," but only defined powers for the solution of a definite problem, viz. the quickest and least painful "liquidation" of the Kornilov move When, after the almost instantaneous quelling of the rebellion, there came a "quinquevirate" period (the so-called Directorate), such a form of government accorded least with my own desires, whereas such a concentration of power as took place on August 27th seems to me to have been a clear necessity. While entering upon a struggle with a conspiracy While entering upon a struggle with a conspiracy directed by the will of a single person, the State must oppose that will by a power capable of prompt and decisive acts. No collegiate body can act as such a power, least of all one that is composed of a coalition.

The blow struck by Kormlov was anned at the very junction of the confition forces that governed the country, the Provisional Government, and could not but strengthen the centrifugil forces within the same The Provisional Government was hving through a crisis like the one it had experienced between the 3rd and the 5th of July, the only difference was in the parts played by the political wings (the Right and the Left)—parts which were now the reverse of what they had been before The struggle with Kormlov had to be carried on in the name and with the participation of the whole people, and the Government had to act only as the people's common authority, without inclining towards the Right wing for an agreement with the rebels, or towards the Left wing for combating whole groups and classes of the population under the pretence of suppressing the counterrevolution As far as we can judge ourselves, the Provisional Government has fulfilled this task of a concentration of authority At any rate, it did not shed a single drop of blood, and it did not permit a single superfluous victim to be made, nor has it deviated a single step from its sworn promise to govern in the name of the general interests of the whole State

That is precisely my reply to the rhetorical question put to me on September 5th at the Democratic Conference by J G Tseitelli "When, at the moment of Kornilov's rush, in older to have a free hand against Koinilov, who was marching upon revolutionary Petrograd with a dictatorship, the head of the Government felt it necessary (but only on that particular occasion) to confront Kornilov with the revolutionary power of a single person, was he right or was he wrong?" To which Tseretelli himself immediately answers that, in his opinion, "he was wrong." He thinks that, "as a matter of fact, only the union of the entire democracy at that moment, the indissoluble union of the Government and of all its representatives with the democracy, could and actually did save the Revolution"

If they did save it, what was wrong then? Why then did Tseretelli not only say of me that "at this time of his administration he committed blunders," but also think fit to declare: "Let democracy blame itself if at that height its repredemocracy plame itself if at that neight its representative's head shall tun." (Cheers.) In what way was the turning of my head made manifest? Was it in my declining to throw myself, between the 27th and the 30th of August, into the arms of the elements and to proclaim, with the support of the Soviets, a campaign against the whole of the Russia that exists outside the Soviets, thus affirming my fullness of power by the horrors of eivil war? Or was it in that, while remaining the representative of the whole democracy, of the whole of Russia that was free and devoted to freedom, I did not, in the night preceding August 28th, appear before the Central Executive Committee of the Councils of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies in order to "unite myself indissolubly" only with one portion of the democracy, though a very influential one? Was it not clear to everyone that, if my head had really turned, I could have that, I my nead mut early turned, I could nive restored tyranny in Russia two months earlier (than it actually earne), at this very Central Executive Committee on the night preceding August 25th, under the cover of the watchword: "Ah the power to the Soviets"? Or was, perhaps, the turning of my head shown in the fact that, on the very next day after the bloodless conclusion of the Kornilov rebellion, I missted in reinstating the work of the Provisional Government as a whole, work of the Provisional Government as a whole, and was only prevented from carrying my wish into effect by impediments from outside, which compelled me to behold for three weeks, with set teeth, how the State was being ruined and the Revolution was perishing, merely because the victory of the whole of Russia, that had been of one many control and applications of the provider of the second control of the second control of the whole of the second control of mmd, was entirely and exclusively attributed to the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies, who (the imaginary victors!) were preparing all the time to dictate their terms to Russia and to the Government! No, the wine of victory did not go to my head, although, if you like, my head was really turning, but only from my consciousness that, in spite of all temptations, I remained sober to the last, though once more solitary. I had been solitary at the very outset of the rebellion, when, because of the conduct of Mihukov and the newspaper "Retch," the Left started to hunt down the whole party of the Constitutional Democrats, and the "Izvestia" of the Central Executive Committee demanded the elimination of the representatives of that party from the Government Then I was the only one who said what J G Tseretelli vainly urged later at the Democratic Conference . vanily urged later at the Democratic Conference. "One must not approach political currents with a Penal Code enterion," and, "When they tell you that you must determine the degree of participation of individual persons or organizations, and that that participation obliges you to sweep away from political work an entire political party containing heterogeneous elements, then the problem has not, politically speaking, been stated properly"] Raupakh.—From the moment, then, when the portfolios were handed over to you, you considered that the plenitude of power belonged to you?

Kerensky.—No, I did not consider it so, and that is why I declined to accept the resignations. The problem merely consisted in creating such conditions as would render it possible to act promptly and resolutely, and to effect, in case of need, a re-grouping within the Provisional Government. This led to the relations with some of the Cadets among the Ministers becoming somewhat strained, as a certain difference in our and their respective attitudes towards events manifested itself. The majority of the Ministers continued to exercise their functions, and actually contributed in every way towards ending the rebellion. Only a very small group of Ministers, not more than two, raised the question of resignation quite formally, and abstained decidedly from every contact with the Provisional Government. They laid stress on their being no longer Ministers. I impressed upon them there and then that this meant that they had resigned of themselves, since I had not accepted the resignation of the members of the Provisional Government.

(Tchernov then also retired immediately from the Provisional Government, but was energetic in repressing the rebellion; he made a tour of all the positions round Petrograd, and issued his appeal by the "Rural Minister" which became famous for a time. At present, when in Russia, or rather in Museovy, the "knights of denunciation and execution" are raging as of old, I consider it a duty to emphasize the fact that the behaviour of those two Cadet Ministers was by no means typical. The other Constitutional Demo-

eratic Ministers remained with the majority of the Phovisional Government. Still less could conclusions be drawn from the conduct of those two members of the Government as to the mood of the whole Cadet Party at the time. One ought to look at the facts, and remember what had happened from the 3rd to the 5th of July. Then it was the same thing, only vice versa. The attempted rebellion, then, too, originated with elements hostile to the coalition, only then they were the Left elements. Then, too, it was necessary to take prompt and resolute measures, while there were also hesitations, but on the opposite wing of the Provisional Government. Those hesitations lasted until the peals of thunder from before Kalusteh and Tarpears of thunder from before Kanasten and Lar-nopol reached Petrograd. Now, as then, nobody approved the "way of acting": on both occasions there was complete solidarity on that question between the two wings of the Provisional Government. On both occasions the question was only ment. On both occasions the question was only as to the manner of combating the rebels, whether resolutely, or by seeking a way to reconciliation. Just as on the 3rd-5th of July, to people who were utter strangers to Social-Maximalist mentality, mere hesitation on the question as to the necessity of iesolute measures seemed to be a crime, so after the 26th-30th August all those were classed among "traitors to the Revolution" who offended in the same way, ie by too closely who offended in the same way, i.e. by too closely approximating to the sentiment of the Koinilovites, or by too intimate an understanding of the motives of their activity. Both these parties in turn failed to "see the wood for the trees"; through their personal sentiment they overlooked the State and that terrible danger which lurked equally in Bolshevism and Kornilovism. On both occasions the position of the members of the Provisional Government who understood too well the motives of the criminal moves was all the more difficult because, within their own parties, now the Left, now the Right, Maximalism already found an active echo Let us remember Kamkov or Martov, in the days of the 3rd-5th July, and Milukov or Struve, in the days of the Kornilov movement.

Lack of sharpness to its edges constituted both the strength and the weakness of the Coalitional Government, it constituted strength so long as State consciousness prevailed over class and group interests, but became a weakness when that consciousness was extinguished

To return to the Cadet Ministers who were in the Provisional Government before, during, and after Kornilovism, I feel bound to testify to the intentional maliciousness of accusing such clean men as Kartashev, Oldenburg, Kishkin and others of any intrigues and conspiracies against democracy. If these Radicals by conviction represented the Russian bourgeoisie as members of the Cadet Party, it was that wise portion of the same which, according to the words of Tseretch himself, "had understood that at this moment the Kornilov adventure did not mean the affirmation of the principles put forward by Kornilov, but the com-plete destruction of the country" The Cadet Party also perceived the error of some of its members after August 27th-29th, Mihukov soon left for a "rest" in the Crimca, while I, as Prime Minister, up to the very opening of the Provisional Council of the Republic, in my negotiations with the Cadet Party, had to deal chiefly with that very sagacious, far seeing, and real statesman, V D. Nabokov J Raupakh—I am putting this question as to your powers because the dismissal of the Supreme Commander-in-Chief would only be possible by an order of the Government.

Kerensky.-This was done before the resignation of the Ministers.

Raupakh.—There was then an ukase, a decision of the Government as to the discharge of Kornilov?

Kerensky.—That was resolved immediately.

Chairman.—And does it exist in writing?

Kerensky.—I don't know whether it exists in writing, as the sitting was a rather stormy one.

Raupakh.—The dismissal, then was not your personal act, but a decision of the Government?

Rerensky.—Certainly. Only I can't say whether the decision was put into writing there and then. At the sittings are present the Chief Clerk of the Provisional Government and the Bureau officials, who afterwards enter all the resolutions in the journal. I only remember that my motion was to the effect that it was necessary immediately to request Kornilov to resign his post. Such was my declaration.

Raupakh.—Do you recollect how the telegram was drafted? In your own name, or in that of the Provisional Government?

Kerensky.—The telegram was composed in a

Raupakh .- Was it not entered in the journal of papers despatched?

Kerensky.—It was drafted in a very great hurry. One must remember the circumstances of that night.

Raupakh.—But it must be in existence. It was transmitted by the direct line. It must be here; we couldn't find it there.

Kerensky.—Where do you mean by "there"? Raupakh.—At Headquarters. It was not to be found there.

Kerensky.--What do you mean by "it was not to be found"?

Chairman.—It proved to have been lost. It was taken by Kormlov; it was brought to the Staff; it was used as evidence, but it was not to be found there We did not get it in the original.

Raupahh.—The dismissal of Kornilov was not, then, a personal act of your own, but a decision of the Government? This is very important.

Kerensky—It was moved and adopted by the Provisional Government before the resignations had been handed to me. There is no doubt whatever about that I made a detailed report, together with the conclusion arising therefrom

The Commission of Inquiry went so minutely into the question of the moment of General Kor-nilov's dismissal and the circumstances in which the telegram about it was dispatched to him because, in the course of the inquiry, formal defects of the telegram mentioned at that point of my interrogatory were advanced as one of the serious motives of Kornilov's refusal to lay down the command The defects were the following: (1) the absence of a serial number, (2) the mere signature "Kerensky" without the addition of my status; (3) the absence of any reference to the decision of the Provisional Government. But if General Kornilov had really entertained any serious doubt as to the authenticity of that telegram, or as to my authority to send it, he could and should first of all have immediately addressed an inquiry for verification; and secondly, his scepti-eism would have been somehow reflected in conversation with Savinkov on the Hughes tape infieline on August 27th; but, of course, he made no such indications of uncertainty. Among motives for refusing to surrender his office set out on the Hughes tape machine is no mention of the formal defects of this telegram. Only in one of Kornilov's depositions known to me he says, by the way. "On the morning of August 27th I received a telegram signed 'Kerensky,' but without any number, instructing me to hand over my post to Linkomsky.' That is all!

Tilonenko, if eredence may be given to his deposition in this case, establishes that it was he who raised the doubt in General Kornilov's mind as to the authenticity of the telegram, and that it was he who ascertained the genuineness of the same on August 27th, in his conversation with Savinkov. In other words, it follows from Filonenko's version that the clearing-up of any doubt as to the genuineness of the telegram did not in the least influence Kornilov's further conduct. Nor did General Lukomsky doubt for a moment the genuineness of my telegram, since without any inquiries he sent me a telegram in reply with a reasoned refusal to undertake the command instead of General Kornilov.

I explained intentionally this insignificant episode of the telegram with greater detail in order to show with what care and attention the Commission of Inquiry was verifying every indication in favour of General Kornilov, and was eager to ascertain the slightest fact that might provide a motive justifying General Kornilov s conduct. How very different was the activity of the Commission of Inquiry, formed by me personally, from any attempt "to hide in snap judgments in Court and in graves the truth, the aims of the movement, and the participation of members of the Government in the affair"! But it is exactly such a purpose that General Aleviev attributes to the "invisible patheipators (in the Kornilov revolt) who came as the masters of destiny and the inanagers of the inquiry."

Does not the whole tenor of the minutes of my examination prove the real independence of the Commission of Inquiry, which enabled it to myestigate so closely, and sometimes even captiously, the acts of the "master of destiny"! Alexency's insumation only proves one thing: that the society educated by the justice of a Steheglovitov only deserves a tribunal à la Stutelika! 1]

§ 23

Chairman—What happened, in chronological order, after you sent off the first telegram, what objections arose in view of the manifesto to the population of the Prime Minister of August 27th which was then being worked out?

Kerensky—I think there arose a question as to the desirability of delaying this telegram, and, I think, it was delayed But which telegram are you speaking of?

of August 27th. (One of the members of the Commission hands to Kerensky the telegram in question )

question) [I remember that the despatch by wireless of this telegram which I addressed to the population was delayed, but not on account of the motives measted upon by those persons who proposed its delay. These persons were anxious to put off altogether the publication of the "conflict" between the Provisional Government and General Kornlov, in order not to lose the possibility of finding a "compromise" and to settle the mis-Muster of Justice under the Bobbeviks understanding by peaceful means, on the basis of "mutual concessions." As I explained before, I could not agree to that, and my agreement was the less possible as towards the evening of the 27th, especially during the night, most of the conciliators insisted on a compromise, no longer on the supposition of Kornilov's bona fide mistake (which by that time was already disproved by the facts), but on the ground of "sober calculation of the real forces." By that time General Kornilov was already a fighting party, which had mobilized its forces.

THE TWO APPEALS TO THE PEOPLE 213

Among the public at large there is a conviction that General Kornilov's active move against the Provisional Government began after he became acquainted with my appeal to the population of August 28th, circulated by wire, and after the telegraphic prohibition to the railways from carrying out any orders of the "late" Supreme Commander in-Chief, that is to say of Kornilov. This conviction is quite erroneous. It is an error which is strongly supported by the Kornilovites. Indeed, Kornilov himself, when he says that it was only on August 28th that "he resolved to move openly and to force the Provisional Government by pressure," is trying to represent his move as a consequence of "my having been declared by the Provisional Government on August 28th to be a traitor to the country."

As a matter of fact, my appeal did not play any part in Koruilov's resolve to make his move. This is clear even from the remark written down by General Kornilov on the very date of August 28th with regard to the copy of my telegram addressed to General Klembovsky, which had been reported to Kornilov. General Kornilov wrote on the copy of that telegram as follows; "I request

General Klembovsky to let me know minediately General Klembovsky to let me know munichately his decision, since on the ground of his yesterday's telegram [that is to say of Angust 27th] I have already taken a definite decision, the resending of which would be the enuse of great convulsions in the army and in the country. On the same day (August 27th) Krimov's echelons began to force their way by violence, so that it proved necessary to remove the rails in order to keep them back. On August 27th General Kornilov's communications with various fronts were concluded, and an order was sent to the Communders of the rear districts to obey Kornilov henceforward At least I know one such telegram that had been sent to the Commander of the Moscow Military District General Denikin had already sent on that day to the Provisional Government his Income but clear telegran No 115, which began with the words "I am a soldier and cannot play at hideand seeh," and as well had undertaken on the spot a number of unequivocal measures In short, on August 27th the mobilization of troops for operations on a wide front was proceeding most intensely at Headquarters So that on the night of August 27th while the conclustors were be of Angust 27th white the committees were be stegning me in the Winter Palace, at Headquarters the irretrievable decision had already been taken "to compel the Provisional Government to remove from its midst those Ministers who, according to my [Kornilov s] information, are traitors to the country, and, secondly, to reorganize itself in such a way as to secure for the country a strong and firm authority. In order to exercise pressure on the Provisional Government, I resolved to utilize General Krimov's 3rd Cavalry Corps, ordering it to continue its concentration towards Petrograd" This forms a most valuable confession by General-Kornilov

THE TWO APPEALS TO THE PEOPLE 215

He thinks, however, that his soldier's word of honour will be believed by everybody and that nobody will ever doubt that it was only after his being insulted by the Government that Kornilov suddenly resolved to make an open move; whereas, in fact, the draft of his famous Declaration to the People of Russia was already prepared on August 27th, my Appeal has perhaps only accelerated its publication with a suitable alteration at the beginning of its text 1

The following is the text of these two documents, to which I have to refer so often

A MESSAGE TO THE POPULATION

I hereby announce

On August 26th General Kornilov sent to me the mem ber of the State Duma V N Lyov with a demand for the surrender by the Provisional Government of the whole plenitude of Civil and Military authority, with a view to his forming, at his personal dis cretion, a NEW GOVERNMENT for administering the country The authenticity of Deputy Lvov s authorization to make such a proposal to me was subsequently confirmed by General Korndov in his eon versation with me by direct wire Perceiving in the presentation of such demands. addressed to the Provisional Government in iny person a desire of some circles of Rus sian society to take advantage of the grave condition of the

PROCLAMATION BY THE SUPREME COMMANDER IN CHIEF

The Premier's telegram No 4103 is in its first portion a lie throughout it was not I who sent Deputy Vladimir Lvov to the Provisional Government but he came to me as the Premier's envoy Deputy Alexis Aladin is a witness to this

A great provocation has thus taken place, which jeo pardizes the fate of the FATHERLAND

PEOPLE OF RUSSIA!

Our great country is dying The hour of its end is near Being compelled to come for ward in the open, I, General Kormlov, declare that, under the pressure of the Bolshevik, majority of the Soviets, the Provisional Government is acting in complete accord State for the purpose of establishing in the country a state of authority in contradiction to the conquests of the Revolution, the Provisional Government has found it indispensnible:

To authorize me, for the salvation of OUR country, of liberty, and of Republean order, to take prompt and resolute measures for the purpose of uprooting any attempt to enerosch upon the State and upon the rights which the citizens have conjucred by the Revolution

I am taking all necessary measures to protect the liberty and order of the country, and the population will be informed in due course with regard to such measures

At the same time I order

1. General Korndos to surrender the post of Supreme Commander in-Chief to General Klembossky, the Comman der in Chief over the armies of the Northern front which har the way to Petrograd, and General Klembossky to enter temporarity upon the post of Supreme Commanderin Chief, while remaining at Pskov

II To declare the city and district of Petrograd under Martial Law, extending to it the regulations for the localities declared under Martial Law. with the plans of the German General Staff, at the time whenevery troops are landing on the Righ cost; it is killing the army and shiking the foundations of the country.

A grave sense of the mevitnble rum of the country commands me at this threstening moment to call upon all Russian people to save the dying country, All you in whose breast a Russian heart is beating; all you who believe in God and in the temples, pray to the Lord to mamfest the greatest mirnele of saving our native land I. General Kormlov, the son of a Cossaek peasant, declare to all and sundry that I want nothing for my own person. except the preservation of a Great Russer and I swear to earry over the people, by means of a victory over the enemy, to the Constituent Assembly at which it will decide its own fate and choose the order of its new State life.

I cannot bring it upon myself to hand over Russat to its hereditary entiny, the German race, and to turn the Russian people into slaves of the Germans, but prefer to due on the field of honour and buttle, so as not to see the shame and mfamy of the Russian Land provided for the possibility of another 'turn of events It was also necessary to take into account the possibility of surprise on the part of those elements who had been got ready in various localities, including Petrograd, with the intention of forming fighting bodies from them; about these we had information. It may be added that by the trains going from Mohilev towards Petrograd, which were stopped on the way on the 27th and the 28th of August, there travelled groups of persons who were intended to distinguish themselves at Petrograd by their active support of Headquarters.]

Russian people, the life of your country is in your hands! GENERAL KORNILOV.

The 27th day of August 1917.

§ 24

Chairman —Were no objections raised against sending off that telegram of August 27th?

Kerensku.-Objections were made. It was urged that the affair would perhaps end in a compromise. That was said by those who held the point of view which was most clearly expressed afterwards by Miliukov, who called upon me to offer his mediation, declaring that I ought to understand that the real strength lay on the side of Kornilov.

Until it became finally clear that my predictions were correct, and that Kornilov found himself in a complete "vacuum," there remained up to the last moment a large number of adherents to a policy of compromise, or, to speak more correctly, of surrendering the positions to Kornifov.

[Milukov's visit to my study took place during the day of August 28th.

In this connection General Alexeiev says in his deposition as follows. "As it seemed very likely that in this affair General Kornilov was acting in agreement with several members of the Provisional Government, and that only during the last days of August—the 26th to the 28th—this agreement was infringed or some misunderstanding had oc-eurred in the interval, Miliukov and myself called once more on the Premier on August 28th at 3 p.m., to make an attempt to induce him to send to Mohilev several members of the Government to Mohlev several members of the Government together with Miliukov to clear up matters so as to reach an agreement; or, at least, to continue negotiations by the Hughes apparatus. But in this we met with a resolute refusal." I ought to mention that while he was in my study General Alexeiev kept silent the whole time, except for a few words on the position at the front in the absence of command which had occurred, so that I was rather in the dark as to the reason for his presence at my interview with Miliukov. At any rate, it never occurred to me then, on August rate, it never occurred to me then, on August 28th at 3 p.m., that there were sitting before me not only partisans, but such partisans as had come to me from a certain meeting, as I learnt afterwards. I need hardly say that the motives for the necessity of continuing negotiations, which are set out in the above deposition of General Alexeiev, were not even hinted at by Miliukov in our conversation; for, if he had done so, he would not have had the opportunity of earrying on his conversation with me to the end.

Miliukov reasoned on the ground of the interests of the State, of the patriotic motives of the move of General Kornilov, who was only mistaken in his methods, and, lastly, as an ultima ratio, he brought forward the reason which seemed to him the most eonclusive and effective, namely, that the real strength lay on the side of Kornilov.<sup>1</sup>

On what real forces they were counting at Headquarters and on what shey founded their assurance of the wide support

As far as I remember, I replied that I would rather die than subordinate Right to the argument of Force. I added that I was astonished at the suggestion made to me, the Premier, to continue negotiations after General Konnilov had dared to declare the members of the Provisional Government to be agents of the German General Staff. Yes, I was very angry. I felt extremely indignant at Miliukov's complete indifference to this, to say the least, quite inadmissible sally of Kornilov, though among the members of the Provisional Government there were some of Miliukov's elosest political friends. Even Prince Trubetzkoy, who experienced the strong pressure of the atmosphere at Headquarters, relates that and success of " the open move against the Provisional Government," may be seen from the following "diplomatic" telegram, No 262, from Prince Trubetzkoy, authorized by General Kornilov, which was sent on the morning of August 28th to the Minister of Foreign Affairs. I describe this telegram as authorized by General Kormlov because, before dispatchand it to Petrograd, Prince Trubetzkov had shown it to General Kornilov, who, "after acquainting himself with the text of the same, said, 'Send it on'" Here is the text of this telegram, which has become known to me only now --

"On a sober estimate of the position, one has to admit that the whole personnel in command, the overwhelming majority of the officers, and the best part of the army at the front will follow Kormlov In the rear there will stand on his side the whole of Cossackdom, the majority of the military schools, as well as the best elements of the troops, To their physical power must be added the superiority of a military organization over the weakness of the Government organs, the moral sympathy of all non-Socialist elements of the population, the ever-growing discontent with the existing order among the lowest classes, and, among the majority of the popular and urban masses, who have become blunted in regard to everything, the indifference which obeys the stroke of the whip. An enormous number of those who were Socialists in March will doubtless pass over immediately to when on August 28th he became acquainted with the contents of the Proclamation to the Russian People (Kornilov's Order No. 1), he was "so astonished at it that he doubted its genuineness," and it became clear to him that "adventurers had passed off on General Kornilov a document which he signed without proper consideration." The text of that document made it clear to Trubetzkoy that reconciliation was impossible.

I also remember that in the course of that conversation I pointed out to Miliukov that my attitude towards the move of Kornilov could not be any different from my attitude towards the Bolsheviks in July; that from the point of view of the authority of the State the position was in their side. On the other hand, the latest events at the front and in the rear, especially at Kazan, have demonstrated with uninstalable clearness the picture of the complete bankruptcy of the present order of things and the incertability of a catastrophe unless a crisis takes place at once.

"This consideration seems to be decisive for General Kormlov, who is aware that only by resoluteness is it possible to stop Russia at the edge of the abyss into which it will otherwise roll. It is nother here nor there to say that Kormlov is preparing the triumph of the Kaiser, when there will soon remain nothing for the German troops to overcome except our wide expanses. It depends on the men now in power whether they will meet the inevitable crisis half-way, thus rendering it painless and preserving the real guarantees of popular feeedow, or it they will take upon themselves, by their opposition, the responsibility for immunerable never calamities. I am convinced that only the immediate arrival here of the Prenuc, of the Deputy Munister of War, and of yourself, in order to establish jointly with the Supreme Commander-in-Chaf the foundations of a strong authority, can act the threatening danger of cull war."

Does not this telegram once more confirm that my urgent measures against General Kornilov's move had a sufficient foundation ?

both eases exactly the same, and that the Government was faced by a similar attempt to snatch power by violence, etc. I remember how Milukov argued, from the difference in the motives of the erime (which difference as to motives I did not deny myself, nor do I deny it now), the necessity for a different attitude on the part of the Government towards the erime itself. I thus had before me an inversion of Marlov in July. Indeed, the leading articles in the "Reteli" (the leading organ of the C D) at this time corresponded to the leading articles in the "Novaya Jizn" (the organ of Internationalist Menshewks) during the period of the Bolsbevik revolt.

I have already mentioned that prominent individual Liberals were giving by their conduct in the Kornilov days fruitful material to Bolshevik and semi Bolshevik demagogues. In the ranks of the democracy there began a final assault upon the sole State idea which had been saving the State from political death—upon the idea of a single universally national authority. Some started the attack openly and others in a cowardly way, hiding themselves behind the watchword of "a coalition without the Cadets," though they knew full well that this watchword practically signified the negation of a coalition, since all that was progressive, but not democratic, including the industrial aristocracy of Moscow, had then united round the Constitutional Democratic Party

After Kormlov's move the Government rema ned solitary in its endeavour again to unite "the representatives of all those elements which placed the eternal and general interests of the country above the temporary and private interests of single parties or classes" The Government declared this aspiration to be its immediate task in its Message to the population of September 1st, in which it proclaimed Russia to be a Republic. The "eternal and universal" was forgotten by all parties and classes in the name of the "temporary and private"; both among the democracy and the bourgeoisie the irreconcilable but active minority was rapidly capturing influence and power. If, however, one can understand Bolsheviks who, by letting loose all the dark animal instincts of the masses of the people, wished to capture and to utilize for their own purposes the really gigantic force of these masses, one must stand quite puzzled at the "Realist" policy of the irreconcilable wing of the bourgeois intellectuals, who made it their aim to free the State from the pressure of the whole "revolutionary democracy," without possessing at that time any real force at their disposal. Truly, God deprives of their reason those whom He wishes to chastise. But, while punishing them-selves, these "sober" elements of the country have greatly helped the Anarchist-Bolsheviks to precipitate Russia into the abyss.]

Kerensky.—Apart from the attempts at compromise, there went on at this time a wholesale exodus from this place, known to be doomed to ruin. Indeed, on a certain night I walked about here, in the Winter Palace, almost alone, not because I did not wish to act together with anybody else, but simply because such an atmosphere had been created all round that it was considered to be more prudent to keep away from such marshy ground.

II must admit that in appearance Miliukov had II must admit that in appearance Miliukov had selected a very convenient moment for proving to me that the real strength was on the side of Kornilov. The day of the 28th of August was precisely the time of the greatest hesitations and of the greatest doubts as to the strength of Kormlov's opponents, as well as of the greatest nervousness opponents, as well as of the greatest nervousness in the midst of the democracy itself. The larger mg self suggestion of a "counter-revolution" had induced a good many to exaggerate the strength of the adherents of the "Republican reaction" in the country. Bevildered by the noisy confusion of the "Kornilovist revolution," a good many people were as erudely mistaken as Milukov himself. I shall never forget the painful long hours of that Monday, and especially of that Monday night. What pressure was I subjected to all that time, resisting while seeing the growing perplexity all round me! This Petrograd atmosphere of utter mental depression was rendering still more unbearable one's consciousness that the absence of a Chief at the front, the excesses within the utter mental depression was rendering still mounderable one's conseiousness that the absence of a Chief at the front, the excesses within the country, and the dislocation of transport might cause at any moment interrievable consequences to the as yet hardly recuperated mechanism of the State. During those painfully lingering days I was weighed down by a truly superhiman responsibility! I remember with a feeling of satisfaction that I did not then bend down under its weight I also remember with gratitude those persons who supported me then simply as human beings. It was only on the next day, August 29th, that a mighty reaction against the mad attempt of the conspirators manifested itself throughout the whole of the country. I have already said, and I must point out once more, that the credit for the victory over Kornilov could not under any circumstances be especially aseribed to the Soviets. The Kornilov movement was bloodlessly crushed at the very first moment only thanks to the enthusiasm and the unity of the chole country, which had rallied to the national democratic authority. This unity

THE DAYS OF THE REBELLION 225

embraced immeasurably wider strata of the population than the Soviets circles at that time. The new municipal and Zemstvo local government bodies then played an enormous part in the popular movement Hundreds and hundreds of telegrams from all corners of Russia were speaking out clearly that at this time the "unification of all the living forces of the country" was not yet an empty sound It should not be forgotten that precisely at this time there was going on a healthy process of decrease in the political importance of the Soviets in the State That process was interrupted by Kornilovism, which turned the Soviets into Bolshevik citadels Noi should it be forgotten that the Government had taken all its decisions and issued its orders before any outsider was aware of the very fact of Kornilov's move. The legend of the Government's having taken its measures against Kornilov only under pressure from the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies is absolutely contrary to the facts. In looking through the newspapers of that period I came across, in the issue of the "Izvestia" of the Central Executive Committee of the Sovicts of the Work-men's and Soldiers' Deputies of August 27th, a characteristic little article entitled "A Night of Alarm," which shows strikingly how far even of Alarm, when shows strikingly how lai even the most informed inhabitants of Petrograd were from the reality on the monning of August 27th That paragraph relates the uninterrupted and alarming sittings of the Ministers and the Premici's adarming strengs of the military authorities, explaining it all by the expectation of street demonstrations on the six months' ce'ebration of the outbreak of the Revolution The newspaper in question concludes its description of the night of alarm with the remark that, "on inquiries being made, the Bolsheviks and other organizations have made categorical statements that they had neither prepared nor were contemplating any movements Similar declarations were made by all the democratic organizations" Indeed, the day of August 27th passed off at Petrograd most quetly, without there being seen any hint of the Bolshevik rebellion which V Li ov had prophesied with such assurance. The author of that little article had not even the slightest idea as to how near he was to the truth when he reported "some conjectures as to the possibility of such move-ments being provoked by the organizations of the Right"! The 28th of August was the haidest day, owing to its uncertainty, while on the evening of the 29th it had already become possible to issue the following Government communique "The rebellious attempt of General Korinlov and of the handful of adventurers who had gathered round him remains quite isolated from the active army and navy Orly small detachments which had been moved by General Korinlov towards Petrograd still remain in error, but the further movement of these echelons has been stopped and communications between them interrupted From everywhere in the provinces reports arrive affirming the complete loyalty of the troops and of the population to the Provisional Government, while population to the Provisional Government, while all the public organizations send in declarations of their resolve to support the Government." On August 30th the Winter Palace was again full of people and animation, the calculators of the balance of forces having forgotten their hesitations. General Alexaeve left in the evening for Headquarters, but already on September 1st the Provisional Government had to write. "The insurrection of General Kornilov is suppressed, but the trouble carried by him into the ranks of the army and into the country is great. There is onee more a great danger threatening the fate of the country and its liberty. The Provisional Government considers it to be its main task to restore the order of the State and the fighting capacity of the army" In its issue of September 3rd the "Izvestia" of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies, in an article headed "Do not Destroy the Army," had to put the terrible question "Was it the unruly acts and the assas-Russian soldier that have saved Russia from Kornilov's conspiracy? No, Russia was saved by something quite different" If a certain newspaper in a neutral State has recently put to the German Government the tragic inquiry as to whether it was going to creet in the Siegesallee at Berlin a monument to the conqueror of Russia—Lenin, I maintain very seriously that the Bolsheviks ought to creet on one of the squares of the former Russia an obelisk to Kornilov, with the inscription "In

Chairman—Had you had no conversation, with regard to the position that had been created, with Terestchenko, Dutov, Karaulov, and Savinkov?

Kerensky—These conversations had nothing to Kerensky—These conversations had nothing to do with my telegram of August 27th As far as I remember, Dutov and the Cossaeks came on

Chairman -That is so

Kerensly - They came with an intimation that they should like to go to Headquarters with a the relations with Kormlov I repeated that I would grant the permission required But when on the next day, August 28th, there followed on the part of Korndov not only an open act of disobedience, but also a declaration to the effect that we, the Provisional Government, were German that we, the Provisional Government, were German agents, I refused permission for the Cossaeks to start for Hadquarters, saying that after the con-ditions now created any mediations or journeyings for arranging the affair had become impossible, since the matter had now passed into quite a differ-ent stage. The Cossaeks were greatly excited and made a grievance of my having first promised to let them start and then withdrawing the permis-sion. My answer was all the time to the effect that the position had changed in the interval in a radical manner

a radical manner [Altogether, in August the conduct of the Soviet of the Cossack armies was rather provoking, while in those days its members, and especially its Presi dent, only managed with difficulty to abstain from giving utterance to their real opinions and intentions. I had to speak to them very sharply, all the more so as I could oppose to their political declarations the temper of Cossackdom at the front, which, since the resolution passed by the Council of the Cossack armies as to the irremovability of Complex than the declarations are resolutions. Council of the Cossack armies as to the irremovability of Kornilov, had been protesting to me against the policy of the Council When later, on the 29th and 30th of August, one deputation after another kept on arriving from the units of the third Cossack Coips, I had for the first time occasion to convince myself of the extraordinary exaggeration of the idea as to any special unity between the high and the low ranks in Cossack dom I was able to convince myself of to note more through my personal experience at Gatchina When a delegation from the Council of the Cossack

THE DAYS OF THE REBELLION 229

armies arrived there and began, among other things, to work against me as the "betrayer" of Kornilov, they met with no success among the rank and file of the corps, where, on the contrary, there was found favourable soil for the Bolshevik propagandists who were also agitating against me, but who concentrated their attention on quite different matters. In the end, after their having decided to "deliver me" to Dibenko, they nearly resolved to arrest their own officers as well. I was not, therefore, astonished in the least when news reached me of the sad issue of the fighting on the Don against Moseow Bolshevism.]

Raupakh.-What about the proposal of Iakubovitch, Tumanov, Savinkov, and Lebedev to enter upon a compromise?

Kerensky.-I do not remember any conversation with Iakubovitch and Tumanov. As for Savinkov. there had been a conversation with him about giving him an opportunity of talking the matter over with Headquarters by the direct line, already on the evening of the 26th of August.

Raupakh.—But after that, did he not say that it was still possible?

Kerensky.-He was given the opportunity of speaking by direct line, and he did so throughout the whole day. But when Lukomsky's telegram. which you probably remember, arrived and Savinkov read it, he handed me a declaration to the effect that the reference made to him was a calumny, and that he never did, nor could, earry on negotiations in my name. He made a similar declaration to Kornilov by the direct line.

Raupakh.—Did not that conversation serve as a reason for Savinkov to point out that there was some possibility . . .?

Kerensky., That was during the night.

Raupakh -After the conversation by the direct line ?

Kerensky —Possibly I don't remember Raupakh —I am anxious to clear the matter up with regard to all the persons who have been mentioned

Kerensky -There were all sorts of persons, they should be divided into groups. As for the visit of the Cossacks, they were simply anxious to reach Headquarters in time I have no doubt whatever that they were among those persons who, like Miliukov, for instance, were convinced that a victory would fall to the side of Kornilov, and not to that of the Revolution

Raupakh -To the side of the "real forces"?

Kenensky -As I said before, all these persons must not be thrown into one heap As for Iakub ovitch and Tumanov, I do not remember having had any conversation with them They spoke perhaps with me too, but such conversation must have been so insignificant that I remember nothing about it I know only one thing when I asked how it was that I did not see either Tumanov or Iakubovitch, I was told by somebody-by Savinkov, if I remember rightly—that the whole thing had had such an effect on Tumanov that he was in a most depressed condition I think that Iakubovitch came later, and, if I am not mistaken, I requested him to invite several people to assist in organizing the defence I iemember, however, with certainty Savinkov's offer to speak by direct wire on August 27th, and then Miliu kov's call on the 29th Subsequently, at the meeting of the Provisional Government, when we discussed the question, I think, already on the eve of the solution of the erisis, part of the Government expressed itself for the necessity of a solution by compromise, in view of the "correlation of forces" and of the necessity to avoid commotions Some argued that it would inevitably strengthen the Bolshevik current. There were various conversations, but they were in another connection—in connection with estimating the correlation of forces I stood on the definite position that there were no two parties, but only the Provisional Government and a general who had transgressed his duties

There was a group of persons and a portion of public opinion who considered that there were two parties with equal rights to fight for power, to carry on with one another, so to say, peace negotiations, and to appeal for mediation I was of opinion that such a course would inflict a decisive blow to the idea of revolutionary authority and to the unity it had maintained since the outset of the Revolution I therefore could not accept the view of two camps negotiating through mediators, considering that I should break my oath by taking such a course

Raupahh —Was there no offer of negotiations m view of the possibility of misunderstandings?

Kerensky - Savinkov made an offer on the evening of the 26th

Raupakh — After the conversation by tape What about Terestchenko and Lebedev 9 about Teresteienko and Lebedev?

Kerensky—I don't remember such a thing with regard to Lebedev, rather the opposite Lebedev was very suspicious of Filonenko's part in this affair, and Filonenko's exit was due, properly speaking, to Lebedev's communication of a certain conversation which had taken place at the Staff on the night of Filonenko's arrival from Headquarters. As for Terestelenko, he was at one time really in favour of an agreement.

he even said at one of the meetings of the Provisional Government that the business ought to be settled in such a way that both Kerensky and Kornilov should be set aside, thus satisfying both parties by a mutual sacrifice

Chairman -Who diafted the appeal to the did it Regional Commissaries of the provinces bear your signature?

Krokhmal -Excuse me, who drafted the communication of August 27th?

Kerensky -I don't remember

Chairman -And the one to the provincial commissaires 9

Kerensky -I am unable to state that either Chairman -We are interested in the part of Nekrassov, was it not drafted by him? Kerensky —What do you mean by the "part of Nekrassov"? He had no particular part what-

cver

Chairman - We ask it on account of a newspaper paragraph which states that the Provisional Government was prepared to refrain from sending out the telegram announcing the conspiracy, but that Nekiassov made haste and dispatched it against the opinion of the Government thus placing the latter before an accomplished fact

Kerensky -I don't remember I do remember that the telegram which was to have been sent by wireless was kept back merely because we thought that we ought not to over excite public opinion and sentiment

[Nekrassov's part! That is one of the mali-cious inventions in the Kormlov affair One finds in the deposition of nearly every withess favourable to Kormlov some reference to the part of Nekrassov - to the part of the evil genius of the Premier, "who easily yields to outside influences." Here, Nekrassov is eirculating, without the Government's knowledge, a telegram which "renders any further negotiations impossible"; there, he orders on his own initiative the rails on the road to Kornilov's detachments to be removed; then again, he comes forward in the removeu; then again, he comes forward in the capacity of an irresponsible adviser, and so on. I read myself in one of the pro-Kornilov newspapers how Nekrassov "has destroyed the possibility of an agreement between Kerensky and Kornilov." Paragraphs in this style were appearing continually. Of course, all that was pure invention and Newspaper himself. invention, and Nekrassov himself was quite right when he proved that all the leading instructions emanated from me, and that nothing of importance had been undertaken without me. Still, there is no smoke without a fire: Nekrassov really did very much towards putting an end to Kornilov's move as promptly as possible. This was his erime for which the Kornilovists could not forgive him! They were taking revenge on Nekrassov because, as Deputy Prime Minister—that is to say, as my nearest assistant in the supreme administration—he earried out, in those alarming days of general uncertainty, the duties of his office most conscientiously and with rare energy. They took revenge upon him for having assisted me. I leave alone the consideration that, even as a simple eitizen, Nekrassov would have been fully entitled to contribute towards the prompt sup-pression of the rebellion, even apart from any of his particular duties. The Kornilovists would perhaps somewhat have softened their attitude towards him if they had been aware that there was an hour when I did not see even Nekrassov near me!

But why the part of Nekrassov, who had ac-eelerated the suppression of the insuricction, should have interested so much the Commission of Inquiry is not quite clear to me. I am reluctant to admit that any energetic activity in the suppression of the revolt should have interested some members of the Commission of Inquiry more than the revolt itself

The unscrupulous baiting started in various Kornilovist publications against all those who had brought about Kornilov's collapse may be seen even from the way in which the "Novoye Vremya" even from the way in which the "Novoye Vremya of October 10th reported my examination by the Commission of Inquiry, of which the original minutes are now placed before the reader's eyes I shall quote a characteristic extract from the "Novoye Vremya" version. After an introductory remark to the effect that "A F. Kerensky frequently took part himself in the examination of witnesses" (which is a downight he), that paper begins to event my deposition thus.

begins to report my deposition thus .-

"He first gave some brief explanations, setting out in a compressed form the whole course of his negotiations with General Kornilov. These explanations called forth, however, a number of suppliementary questions One of the members of the Commission of Inquiry evineed an interest in the question as to whether the Prime Minister had charged V. N. Lvov to carry on negotiations with Headquarters. A. F. Kerensky replied in the affirmative (? 1). The Premier histories confirmed (? I) that Lvov was not present at the conversa-tion by the Hughes apparatus on August 26th, and declared that in view of the alarming moment and of the importance of the question to the State, he had taken recourse to such a trick (?). A series of questions were then put to Kerensky as to the reason for the retrement of several Ministers and as to the pressure (?) exercised in that matter on the Premier by his former Deputy, Nekrassov. Altogether, the Extraordinary Commission of Inquiry concentrated its attention greatly on the part of Nekrassov. The Premier was asked about the author of A. F. Kerensky's well-known Appeal to the people with regard to the move of General Kornilov, who was described there as a rogue (?), a betrayer (?), and a traitor (?). A. F. Kerensky stated that the author of that telegram was N. V. Nekrassov (? 1). One member of the Commission of Inquiry questioned in detail (?) on Nekrassov's interference with purely military questions and on the pressure exercised by him in deciding questions on the recalling of members of the High Command of the army."

Such a mixture of perversions of the truth and of downright lies was offered to the reader as a report of my examination. For the thorough appreciation of the editorial work of the "Novoye Vremya" and similar papers, one has to keep in mind that, possessing the advantage of a very good source, the Kornilovist papers had at their disposal all the original minutes and documents of the Commission of Inquiry almost on the very day of their production. Unfortunately I only learnt too late who had provided that source.]

Chairman.—What about Krimov and the third corps detachment? Were any orders given to stop it, to damage the road, etc.? Was it called forth by some document, or only by an apprehension that had but little foundation? Did Krimov commit any act of open disobedience to Staff orders?

Kerensky.—As I said before, Krimov participated in the revolt, which he joined, together with a small number of officers, with quite definite intentions. I remember one little incident: when Krimov shot himself, an officer, whose name I don't quite remember—I think it was Bagratuni— remarked: "Now all traces have disappeared." Krimov did not carry out the order to stop the movement and continued to go forward.

Chairman.-If such orders were given, they were, then, ealled forth by some documents?

Kerensky.-Yes, by communications as to the location of the units in question. The chief part was played in this case by the railwaymen, who reported even the slightest movements.

δ 25.

Chairman .- What did Filonenko actually report on his arrival from Headquarters?

Kerensky.-Filonenko's arrival at Petrograd was not quite intelligible to me. I don't know the actual reason for his arrival. He reported nothing to me until I summoned him myself to the Palace. I had seen him at night at the District Staff. As soon as Filonenko made his appearance there, Sayinkov intimated to me that he would like to have him as his nearest assistant in the defence of Petrograd. I objected, but ultimately agreed to this, as I considered the chief director of operations could select whomsoever he chose as his assistant, on his own responsibility. But the next day it transpired that Filonenko had been carrying on a most unsuitable conversation with General Kornilov. I then summoned him here, and he confessed the nature of the conversation, which 'he related. But Savinkov began to put forward a whole series of attenuating comments. I ought to say that Savinkov is a very trustful man, and when he once has faith in anybody, he does not notice any defects in him for a long time. This is what Filonenko related to me: Kornilov had asked him whether it would not be opportune for him to proclaim himself dietator. Filonenko replied that he was against a personal dietatorship, and refused to support Kornilov. The latter then suggested to him a "collective" dietatorship, to be composed of Kornilov, Kerensky, Filonenko, and Savinkov, to which Filonenko replied that he was ready to join such a combination.

I considered that this conversation was inad-

I considered that this conversation was inadmissible in itself, apart from the fact that anyone might conjecture that Filonenko had some reasons for speaking in that way, since he was the representative of the Central Government with the Supreme Commander-in-Chief. I therefore found that it was impossible to retain him in service any longer. At first I even wanted to arrest Filonenko, but afterwards I withdrew that order in view of the position which Savinkov had taken up on that question. I decided that this could be done later on just as well, and confined myself for the present to ordering him to vacate his post immediately.

[Filonenko arrived at Petrograd from Headquarters on the night of August 28th. Early in the morning of the 29th there called on me V. T. Lebedev (the former Deputy Minister of Marine, whom I had appointed on August 28th to be Assistant to the Governor-General of Petrograd). He appeared quite alarmed, and told me that, together with Colonel Bagratuni (the Chief of Staff of Petrograd Military District), he had heard Filonenko using quite an inadmissible phrase in his conversation with Savinkov. I ordered Filonenko to be arrested. Shortly afterwards Savinkov called on me, requesting me either to airest him together with Filonenko of to examine Filonenko's accusers in the presence of both of us. I thereupon ordered Lebedev, Bagratum, and Filonenko to be summoned to my study, where all of them appeared about 11 a m. The sequel I shall quote from the very exact report made by V. T. Lebedev in No. 145 of the "Vola Naroda".—

"A. F. Kerensky addressed us thus. 'I call you together, gentlemen, for the following reason. V. T. Lebedev told me that in his report to B. V. Savinkov, M. M. Filonenko had made use of the following phrase. "But I kept on defending our scheme: Koruilov and Kerensky as the two pillars of the dictatorship." Do you confirm it, Colonel Bagratum ?

"' Yes, I confirm it,' replied Colonel Bagratum.
"' And you, M. M. Filonenko?'

"'And you, M. M. Filonenko "'Yes. I made that remark."

"M. Filonenko that remark."

"M. Filonenko then related that, after the arrival of V. N. Lvov, he had discussed together with Kornilov a plan of a dictatorship in the form of a 'Council of Defence,' composed of the following persons General Kornilov, A. F. Kerensky, Savinkov, and himself. He had been discussing that plan in order to ecunterate the contingency of the sole dictatorship of Kornilov, which would otherwise become inevitable. The Premier was quite astounded at this confession.

"'How could you, the Supreme Commissary of the Provisional Government, earry on such a conversation with Kormlov! Who authorized you to do so? General Kormlov might now indeed say that he had been led indirectly into error.'

"Filonenko endeavoured to prove that he had put forward this plan as a counterpoise to the schemes of the conspirators, that there was no time to be lost, and, lastly, that this conversation had been carried on in the spirit of private relations and personal friendship.

"'For General Kornilov you were the Supreme Commissary, and this conversation of yours was a conversation between the Supreme Commissary and the Supreme Commander-in-Chief. You appeared to General Kornilov as representative of the Provisional Government, which, however, had never authorized you to make any such declarations.'

"When Savinkov and Filonenko pointed out that an essentially similar plan of a Council of Defence had been brought forward by the Provisional Government, A. F. Kerensky replied:—

visional Government, A. F. Kerensky replied:

"'Never, never! A question was raised and a decision reached as to the formation of a "Council of Defence" [or, rather, a War Cabinet] from the midst of the Provisional Government itself, for concentrating in its hands the defence of the whole country, after the example of England. But it never occurred to anyone that General Kornilov, a subordinate of the Provisional Government, could ever enter such a Council. You, however, who are a Commissary of the Provisional Government, diseussed with General Kornilov, without the Government's knowledge, plans for a Directorate into which there should enter three persons who are not members of the Provisional Government—yourself, B. V. Savinkov, and General Kornilov—and one person who does form part of the Government, namely myself, who knew nothing about it!"

"As a result of the conversation, A. F. Kerensky said, that he looked upon M. M. Filonenko's action as taetless, to say the least, and that he considered it impossible for the latter to continue any political work.

WORK

"I, for my own part, declared that I considered M. M. Filonenko's behaviour at Headquarters had been criminal.

"Filonenko consented to submit to A. F. Kerensky's decision and to retire from any participation in the political life of the country, whereat Savinkov came out with a protest, defending the correctness of Filonenko's conduct and explaining away Filonenko's confession in such a manner that A. F. Kerensky corrected him several times by saying:—

""All three of us—myself, V. T. Lebedev, and Colonel Bagratuni—have heard what M. M. Filonenko has said. He said something different."

"As Savinkov went on insisting on the correctness of Filonenko's actions and expressing solidarity with him, the Premier offered to refer the whole business to the Provisional Government, which, however, Filonenko declined, declaring that he preferred to submit to A. F. Kerensky's decision."

Towards the evening of that day Filonenko was officially dismissed. As I pointed out before, Filonenko's behaviour at Headquarters is being used as one of the three proofs of my collusion with Kornilov. General Alexeiev said, indeed, straight out that the question of Kornilov's move had been discussed with Kerensky through Savinkov and Filonenko. I have already spoken of Savinkov, to whom I shall still have to revert; but as far as Filonenko is concerned, I think that the seene in my study is sufficiently convincing proof that no discussion whatever had taken place with me through Filonenko, and I shall not touch upon that question again.

This confession of Filonenko, however, is most important in itself, since it coincides with a corresponding deposition of General Kornilov and with sponding deposition of General Rothio and with his Hughesogram of August 27th. By adding to it the evidence of Trubetzkoy, Lukomsky, and several others, one gets an exact picture of the alterations that the scheme of dictatorship had undergone at Headquarters, as well as on whose initiative the whole question had arisen altogether. Komilov's conversation with Filonenko about a dictatorship took place in the evening of the 26th. The declaration concerning a dictatorship, however, was made by Kornilov to V. N. Lvov on the 24th. On that day a fictitious consent was given to Savinkov not to send Krimov with the "Savage Division" to Petrograd, and on the same day this division was placed by special order under General Krimov and started for Petrograd. According to the admission of General Kornilov himself in his conversation with Lvov, he had declared the necessity of introducing a dictatorship on his own initiative. Lyov's arrival at and departure from Headquarters became known to Filonenko afterwards from Zavoiko and Aladin, who called on him on a visit. From the telegraphic negotiations of August 27th by the Hughes apparatus and the corresponding depositions of Kornilov and Filonenko, it can be ascertained that up to the very evening of August 26th the introduction of Kornilov's sole dictatorship was contemplated. The depositions contain no data for either affirming or denying Filonenko's participation in any consultations on the question of a dictatorship previous to the evening of the 26th. Nor are there any indications as to Filonenko having suddenly changed his point of view on this question when he supported a collective dictatorship on August 26th. Filonenko cannot therefore be recognized as the initiator of the introduction of an individual dictatorship, no matter what his part at Headquarters may have been. I think that one may assert in complete conformity with the facts that the very question of a dictatorship had arisen independently of Filonenko, and that the position of that question at Headquarters was not known to him in its full extent. Unfortunately, General Kormlov's consultation with Krimov and the other military participators in the conspiracy does not seem to have been cleared up at all by the Inquiry. I am convinced, however, that the practical part of the venture was precisely discussed with such clever men as Krimov, and that among them there could perhaps have been found the real initiator of the whole affair. On the strength of the materials become materials known to me, the most active adherent at Headquarters, if not the initiator, of the idea of individual dictatorship must be recognized to be Kornilov himself

All the circumstances of the final consultation about a dictatorship held on August 26th seemed to point to the probability of Filonenko having said perhaps the truth, when he affirmed in my study that only after being confronted by the fact of the inevitable declaration of Kornilov's sole dictatorship he had put forward the counterproposal of a collective dictatorship as the lesser evil. At any rate, the Inquiry has firmly established that this scheme had only arisen on the 26th of August at the consultation between Kornilov, Zavolko, Aladin, and Filonenko; and of all the data of the Kornilov affair, Filonenko's version is the only one I could find which provides an explanation of this sudden alteration of the plan of action. But even Filonenko's story does not reveal those motives which had compelled General

Kornilov to agree to such an alteration in the form of a dictatorship. It is not clear whether Filonenko had really convinced Kornilov that his scheme was more to the purpose, or whether, standing in need for some reason or another of Filonenko's consent on that evening, General Kornilov only pretended for a time to have been convinced by Filonenko. I would rather suppose the latter, because it is hardly possible to assume that General Kornilov did not perceive the whole absurdity of such a dictatorial quartet, composed of Kornilov, Kerensky, Savinkov, and Filonenko! I am simply of opinion that on that evening Kornilov did not take any particular interest in the forms of a dictatorship, since he understood, or at least felt, that on the day following the coup d'état the final decision would belong to him who would remain in power.

would remain in power.

As for the degree of the participation of Filonenko himself in the conspiracy, I am rather inclined to think that he, as well as Lukomsky, for instance, was dragged into the affair at the last moment, being placed before the fact and bound by his boastful loquacity. It is not impossible, however, that a careful judicial inquiry would have revealed that Filonenko had been more deeply concerned in the conspiracy. At any rate, it is very difficult to clear up Filonenko's part at Headquarters, because on one hand his conduct was very slippery, while on the other hand the attitude of Headquarters towards him was rather changeable. Now he was persona grata with Kornilov; now they could hardly put up with him; now he was ordered to be arrested, and now he was given a special train to start for Petrograd. According to the witnesses, he was now attacking me, now insisting that no Government was possible without me; now he demanded the removal of Lukomsky, and now lie would discuss together with him and Kornilov the composition of the future Cabinet in which he claimed the post of Minister for Foreign Affairs, and would only at worst "agree" to act as Minister of the Interior Lukomsky writes, as far as I remember, that in all his relations with Kormlov, Filonenko manifested complete agreement with all his schemes and used to say that he was going hand in hand with him, while at the same time "they did not trust" Filonenko at Headquarters

Even about the arrest of Irlonenko two versions are in existence According to one, he himself asked to be arrested, since "as a representative of the Provisional Government he ought to be on its side, whereas he sympathized with his whole heart with Kornilov "According to the other version, "on noticing a complete change in Filonenko and taking account of the circum stances, General Kornilov announced that he de tained him at Headquarters" What was happening? On the morning of the 27th, on receipt of my telegram dismissing Kornilov, there gathered in his study Lukomsky, Zavoiko, Aladin, and Filonenko They discussed the position that had been created, when Filonenko stated in the course of the conversation that he had to start for Petro grad, whither he had been summoned After the grad, whither he had been summoned After the conclusion of the convensation, Kornilov and Lukomsky left the study and went away together Immediately afterwards Zavotko came out of the study into the hall, telling those present that "Filonenko had just asked to be arrested". On the other hand, Lukomsky, on meeting Trubetzkoy, told him that "Filonenko had been put on parole not to leave the place", Filonenko himself positively asserts that it was not he who asked to be arrested, but that he was detained by Kornilov, and that this happened during that morning conversation in Kornilov's study. Lukomsky's confirmation of the words of Filonenko renders the latter's story more credible.

Now what made Zavoiko represent Filonenko in the character of the wife of the non-commissioned officer in Gogol's "Reviser," who, according to the excuse of the local Governor, had inflicted a flogging upon herself? Why does Filonenko's rôle appear so slippery and changeable at Headquarters? Why, after sending on August 27th from Headquarters a telegram to Petrograd upon the necessity of retaining Kornilov in the post of Surreme Commander-in-Chief and of arriving at an agreement with him, did Filonenko, when he succeeded in getting to Petrograd, issue there a fighting proclamation against Kornilov ? For want of sufficient evidence I am unable to give a definite reply. At any rate, Filonenko's behaviour at Headquarters, as Commissary of the Provisional Government with the Supreme Commander-in-Chief, urgently needed a judicial investigation. and I feel no compunction for having wished to arrest him.

Chairman.—Was the advancement in Filonenko's service career occasioned by his personal qualities as well, or was he merely a protégé of Savinkov?

Kerensky.—Before meeting him during the retreat and the operations on the South-western front, Savinkov knew him very little. I remember, at least, that before being appointed to the army Filonenko referred me to Savinkov, whereas Savinkov afterwards told me that he knew very little of him. Filonenko was one of those young military men who had done much for the organization of the army Commissariats and for dispatching to the front Commissaries who undertook to act there not only by persuasion, but also by personal participation in the battles These were the "Commissaries of personal example" He personally displayed great courage in the 8th Army during the offensive and the retreats. There at the front Savinkov and Filonenko cyidently became intimate Later on, when Kornilov's appointment became nevitable, in view of his "pecu harities" I wanted to appoint Savinkov as Supreme Commissary with him I did not go any further than that Savinkov, however, pointed out that it would be more correct to have Filonenko as Commissary, since the latter had got accustomed to the ways of Kornilov, with whom he had been working I saw Filonenko once or twice at Petrograd in the spring, and also when I spent a day in the sector of the 8th Army, but hardly ever had a talk with him I also saw him at Head quarters and in the train, after the conference of the 16th of July Then it was that a commissary had for the first time to be appointed with the Supreme Commander in Chief, for the purpose, among other things, of being always sure as to the correctness of the political course at Head quarters, in view of the peculiarities in the char acter of General Kornilov I had wished that Savinkov, who had originally been intended to act as Supreme Commissary, should control and direct this political and public work When Savin they was appointed Deputy Minister of War, the question as to the personality of the Commissary with the Supreme Commander in Chief became a matter of indifference to me, since the direction of the political work at Headquarters remained in the hands of Saymkov.

§ 26

Chanman—We were impressed in Savinkov's deposition by his support of Filonenko. He even identified himself with him. When you wished to set Filonenko aside, Savinkov almost coupled it with his own retirement.

Kerensky —Yes, I told Savinkov "I trust you completely, I think that you might commit errors, but I do not doubt in the least your devotion to the Revolution, whereas Filonenko I do not know at all " In this case, too, Savinkov's special feature of standing up to the very end for men "devoted" to him manifested itself Every time he put the question about Filonenko as if it con-cerned his own person When I suggested to Filonenko to eease immediately the execution of his service duties, Savinkov brought up the ques tion of his own retirement, so that I had to post pone for a while I ilonenko's official retirement [as I did not want to lose Savinkov] I considered it, however, impossible to retain Filonenko in office, and Savinkov retired almost immediately onice, and Savinov retired amost infinitely to the declared to me categorically that he did not wish to serve with me any longer, as he did not approve of the new appointments of Verkhovsky and Verderevsky, and absolutely insisted on re signing

[With regard to Tilonenko's confession, there might arise the puzzling question as to why, when Filonenko spoke of "our scheme," that is to say, not only of his own scheme but also that of Sayun koy, I wanted to arrest Filonenko alone and told only him to resign? I must answer straight out because I was perfectly sure that Savinkov had no part chatter in the conspiracy, and I interpreted these words of Filonenko as a mere attempt to justify before Savinkov his participation in an inadmissible and criminal conversation. At the same time, I only saw in Savinkov's persistent and hopeless attempt in my study to put in the mouth of Tilonenko such words as the latter had never uttered, a passionate desire to save Tilonenko.

That Savinkov was by no means initiated into that conversation at Headquarters may be gathered, first, from the fact that even on the 23rd and the 21th of August he was carrying on at Headquarters a struggle with the Mam Committee of the Officers' League and with the political section of Head-quarters (at the head of which was a member of the same Main Committee of the Officers' League. Captain S )-that is to say, with the two organizations, numerous members of which were active participators in the events, secondly, from the fact that General Kornilov personally deceived Savinkov on the question of Krimov and of the Native Caucasian Division (as far as I remember, even the very presence of Krinov at Headquarters remained unknown to Savinkov), thirdly, from the fact that even at the most critical moment, after Lukomsky's telegram on Lvov's and Savin kov's proposals, at the latter's direct declaration that the reference made to him was a calumny, Kornilov was not only unable to make any re joinder, but was compelled silently to admit it, fourthly, from the circumstance that Savinkov had never been in close intercourse with Zavoiko and Aladin, and could not endure the former at all, looking upon him with great suspicion and avoiding him, while on one occasion he had even obtained his temporary relegation, fifthly, from the fact that Savinkov was himself suspecting and trying to discover the conspiracy at Headquarters, though making a reservation about Kornilov himself, whom he considered to he a patriot and "a stranger to polities"; and sixthly, from the fact that from the 27th to the 30th of August Savinkov did not hesitate for a single moment on whose side he ought to stand.

In order to illustrate the character of the mutual relations of Kornilov and Savinkov and of my own part in their relationship, I shall quote a few extracts from Savinkov's conversations with Kornilov as written down by Savinkov himself:—

few extracts from Savinkov's conversations with Kornilov, as written down by Savinkov himself:—
"Lavr Georgievitch," Savinkov said to Kornilov on August 28rd, "I should like to speak with you in private." (At these words, Lukomsky and Filonenko got up and left the room.) "The matter is this: the telegrams lately received by the Ministry and signed by various persons belonging to the Headquarters Staff, I must tell you frankly, inspire me with alarm. These telegrams frequently treat of questions of a political character, and that in an inadmissible tone. I have stated to you already that I am convinced that you will loyally support the Provisional Government, and will not go against it. But I cannot say the same about your Staff."

will toyally support the Provisional Government, and will not go against it. But I cannot say the same about your Staff."

Kornilov.—"I must tell you that I do not trust any longer Kerensky and the Provisional Government. The latter has not the strength to stand on the ground of firm authority which alone can save the country. As for Kerensky, he is not only weak and vacillating, but even insincere. He insulted me undeservedly [at the Moscow Conference]. Moreover, he carried on conversations behind my back with Teheremissov, and wanted to appoint him Supreme Commander-in-Chief." [Nothing of the kind ever happened.]

Savinkov -" It seems to me that in questions of State there is no room for personal grievances As for Kerensky, I can't share your opinion about him I know Kerensky"

Kornilov—"The composition of the Govern ment ought to be altered"

Savinkov - "As far as I know, Kerensky is of the same opinion"

Kornilov -" It is necessary that Kerensky should not meddle with affairs"

Savinkov -" This is impossible at present, even if it were necessary"

Kornilov -" It is necessary that Alexeiev, Ple khanov and Argunov should be in the Govern ment "

Savinhov -" It is necessary rather that the Soviet Socialists should be replaced by non Soviet Socialists Is that what you mean 9"

Kornilov -" Yes, the Soviets have proved their impracticability and their mability to defend the country "

Savinhov -" All that is a matter for the future You are dissatisfied with the Government, talk it over with Kerensky At any rate, you must admit that without Kerensky at its head no Government is conceivable"

Kornilov -" I shall not enter the Government You are right, of course, that without Kerensky at its head no Government is conceivable. But Kerensky is vacillating he hesitates, he promises and does not fulfil his promises

Savinkov -" This is not correct Allow me to mform you that during the six days that elipsed since the Moscow Conference at which Keren sky declared that he was adopting methods of firm authority the Ministry of War did much, namely

This conversation took place on the 23rd of August. Here are some extracts from a conversation on the following day:-

Kornilov .- " Very well, I shall not appoint

Krimov."

Savinkov.-" Alexander Feodorovitch [Kerensky]

would like you to appoint General D."

Kornilov.-" Alexander Feederovitch has the right of objecting to an appointment, but he cannot instruct me whom to appoint." Savinkov.-" Alexander Feodorovitch does not instruct you, he only requests."

Kornilov .- " I shall appoint D. Chief of the Staff."

Savinkov .- " And what about the Native Division?"

Kornilov .- "I shall replace it by the regular cavalry."

Savinkov .- " Many thanks. Alexander Feodorovitch also charged me to request you to detach for his disposal Colonel Pronin [Assistant President of the Main Committee of the Officers' Leaguel."

Kornilov .- " Pronin! What for ? I understand. It is a concealed arrest ! I shall not let Pronin go. Give me proofs, and I will arrest Pronin myself."

Savinkov .- "Very well. I shall report it in that way to Alexander Feodorovitch."

Kornilov .- " Certainly."

(Follows the conversation about Mironov, which I have already quoted.)

Savinkov .- "Will you allow me, Lavr Georgicvitch, to come back to yesterday's conversation? What is your attitude towards the Provisional Government?"

Kornilov.-" Tell Alexander Feodorovitch that I shall support him in every way, for the welfare of the Fatherland requires it."

Satinkov.—"Lavr Georgievitch I I am happy to hear these words. I never doubted you. I shall tell Alexander Feodorovitch what you have just said."

After this conversation, Savinkov, reassured and confident with regard to Kornilov, leaves at 3 p m. for Petrograd. But a few hours after his departure there takes place the reception of V. N. Lvov, to whom is made the famous declaration for conmunication to me. . . Such was the sincerity and truthfulness of Kormlov, even in his relations and truthfulness of Kornilov, even in his relations with Savinkov I Trying to explain somehow to Savinkov the dupheity of his conduct, Kornilov, when conversing with him by direct line on the 27th of August, says "After your departure I received alarming news on the position of affairs at the front and at the rear." And this within the three or four hours which had clapsed between Kornilov's taking leave of Savinkov at the station and Lvov's call at his study! Let us suppose it was so But when General Kornilov enumerates it was so But when General Kornilov enumerates the new alarming news (which, by the by, contained nothing that was new), he does not mention any particular news he had received during those hours from Petrograd. Why then did he not at least wan Savinkov personally, at the station, that on the strength of "exact information" from Petrograd he considered the position to be "extremely threatening" and the presence of myself and of Savinkov at Petrograd to be "very dangerous" for both of us?

Why then after his most frequely had not be a significant.

dangerous 100 both of us. Why then, after his most friendly last interview with Savinkov, did Kornilov think it necessary, not only to communicate such alarming news through a man who called by chance, but even to "guarantee" through him the complete "safety" of our stay at Headquarters? The wisest man will fail to solve this enigmatical conduct of Kornilov, so long as he assumes that he has to deal with a sincere and truthful soldier who is a "stranger to politics." But to anyone who seeks the truth impartially, this day of August 21th throws a deeper light on the events than a whole bundle of documents. He would perceive how, while he was conversing "sincerely" with Savinkov, matters were—not being talked about but being done with Krimov, Zavoiko, and other initiated persons.

initiated persons.

Savinkov is guilty indeed, but not of any conspiracy with Kornilov, nor, as Alexeiev imagines, of my having been previously "informed" through him of Kornilov's move; his guilt was that while being utlerly unconscious of the character and the real intentions of Kornilov, he unwittingly assisted him in his struggle for power by putting forward Kornilov as a political force with rights equal to those of the Government. He is also guilty of heaving while at Hendougreter exceeded the powers having, while at Headquarters, exceeded the powers granted to him, and of having, besides acting in the capacity of my nearest assistant, also undertaken special political tasks on his own account. He is guilty in that, being insufficiently informed with regard to the general condition of the State, and being unable after a long exile abroad to find his way as yet in the complicated political relations and the real dispositions of the masses, he self-confidently began to carry on a personal he self-confidently began to carry on a personal policy, without taking into account the experience and the plans even of those who, by advancing him to an exceptionally responsible post, had taken upon themselves formal responsibility for his entire activity as a statesman.

But, whatever my personal estimate of such conduct on the part of Savinkov, I must decidedly protest against the declaration made with reference to him at the fourth Conference of the Social Revolutionary Party by V. M. Tehernov on November 28th of last year, to the effect that in the Kornilov nifinir "a more than equivocal, one may say a treacherous, part had fallen to the share of a man who had been once a member of the Social Revolutionary Party." The Kornilov case affords no data whatever for such a declaration. To hurl a similar, more than eareless, necusation was especially unpardounble at a time when Russia, in November last, was living through an orgy of bloodthirsty instincts!

Just because I knew that Savinkov was not concerned in the conspiracy, it never occurred to me to dismiss Savinkov along with Filonenko. Savinkov himself, however, continued with particular insistence to take Filonenko's part, and after cular insistence to take Filonenko's part, and after the morning of the 29th of August I saw that he was only looking out for a pretext for retiring. Such a pretext was found by him in my "lack of correctness towards him" (which I shall not touch upon here, as it is a purely personal ques-tion), and in the appointment of Verkhovsky and Verderevsky as Ministers of War and of Marine respectively. respectively.

Against the latter reason for his resignation on principle I could not raise any objection, whereas now I must admit that Savinkov's negative attitude towards those appointments has been justified by the facts, since the results that were expected from appointing in my place "real" military men have in no way been obtained. It ought to be recognized, however, that between Verkhovsky and Verderevsky there existed an essential difference. The elever and most diplomatic Verderevsky perfectly understood the position created by Kornilovism, and wanted to save whatever could still be saved. He considered it to be his chief task to protect the still uninjured naval officers from any further lynchings and final extermination. This explains his excessive opportunism in his relations with the sailors' organizations. But while "kicking off" somehow the inrush of the rank and file, Verderevsky devoted himself entirely to the task of working out and preparing a number of important measures intended to attempt during the winter the restoration of the fighting capacity of the navy. General Verkhovsky, on the other hand, was not only quite unable to master the situation, but could not even grasp it. He was caught up by the political gamblers of the Left, and he rapidly floated without sail and rudder straight towards catastrophe. There and rudder straight towards catastrophe. There may be imputed to me with much reason the guilt of having appointed Verkhovsky to the post of Minister of War, and I accept that reproach. This was the most unlucky of all the appointments: Verkhovsky introduced into his activity a vague element of comedy. Nevertheless, not by way of justifying myself, but merely as a matter of fact, I ought to say that, previous to his being appointed Minister of War, Verkhovsky had appeared a semewhat different presenting. appeared a somewhat different personality. I shall not speak of his activity at Sebastopol and before, but even on August 27th, in a telegram to Kornilov, he expressed his solidarity with the substance of Kornilov's measures, only protesting against Kornilov's method of acting: "One may and ought to have changed the policy, but not to undermine the last strength of the people at a time when the front was broken through." On arriving at Petrograd after his appointment, Verkhovsky was introducing himself to everybody as a "Kornilovist." Besides, owing to some vagueness in the conduct at the time of the Kornilov movement of other desirable candidates, I literally had no one to choose from, while both from the Right and from the Left there was a sudden desire to see a military man at the post of Minister of War.]

255

$ 27.

Chairman.—Did the Government possess any data when committing Kornilov, Lukomsky, Kisliakov, Denikin, and Markov for trial: something that we have not got, any information that we have overlooked? We have just made an inquiry at Petrograd, interrogating individual persons, but the Government has perhaps something we are not aware of?

Kerensky.—As far as I know, all who had manifested their activity after the formal removal of Kornilov from office were committed for trial. General Kisliakov continued to give orders. Lukomsky—well, I think his position is clear, while the story of Denikin and Markov is known to you.

Chairman.—Were there no special reports?

Kerensky.—On the contrary, the telegram and the behaviour of Lukomsky were a surprise to me. I did not think that Lukomsky would go that way. Even now, I consider it probable that Lukomsky was one of the last to join. After all, the pith of the affair lies no doubt in Zavoiko, Aladin and Co.

Raupakh.—The question just put by the Chairman is of interest to us, because the wording of the prosecution is that they are committed for trial for rebellion. What are the actual data that testified to their participation in a rebellion?

Kerensky.—You are now passing to the question of a definition of the crime they had perpetrated. We considered that Kornilov's open disobedience to the head of the Supreme Authority and his refusal to hand over his office, together with the appeals and orders to the troops that he had issued, constituted a "rebellion," while its participators and adherents appear to be "abetting the rebellion." A crime is always defined by the acts of its chief perpetrator. I do not know by what other method it might be defined.

Raupakh.—By the degree of Kisliakov's, Lukom-sky's, Denikin's, and Markov's participation?

Kerensky,—Really, anyone would think that when the Provisional Government proceeds to measures of prosecution, it appears to be itself a rebellious organization! But this depends on the point of view. As for myself, I have no doubt whatever that a general, who allows himself to call the Provisional Government "agents of the German Staff," and declares himself to constitute a Government, is a rebel! I do not know wherein the irregularity of the definition consists.

Raupakh.—I do not object to the definition; but were there any data against Denikin, Lukomsky, Kisliakov, Markov, and others?

Kerensky.-They continued to co-operate with the insurgent general; these facts are quite suffi-cient. When General Lukomsky is offered to take over the post of Supreme Commander-in-Chief, which he is bound in law to do, and to arrest Kornilov in case of resistance, he declares that he cannot do it because he is on the side of Kornilov. What clse is required?

Chairman.—Now about Novossiltsev [the President of the Main Committee of the Officers' League]. Who carried out his arrest; was there no report concerning Novossiltsev's acts when he was Kerensky,-Novossiltsev was airested on the local initiative.

Chairman—He was the President of the Mam Committee; so was he not present at Headquarters?

Kerensky -He had just left at the time.

Chairman - It looks as if there had also been an order from here for his arrest.

Kerenshy—I think that if there had been such an order it would have been of an administrative character. The Government, the Premie and the Minister of the Interior have the right to arrest anyone, if we consider it to be necessary.

Chairman -I only meant to ask for information;

perhaps, sir, you possess some?

Kerensky—Exact information? No Personally I am convinced (under the conditions of our detective system it will perhaps be impossible to prove it) that a portion of the Officers' League, and especially of its Main Committee, was very closely connected with all the attempts, including this one I have already said that in the preparations that were made here, at Petiograd, a portion of the Officers' League had taken part I will not mention what may be called the, so to say, "legal" telegrams, which were all signed y Novossitisev How did he behave during this affair? If he had not left, I think Suppose, for instance, that de Semitter were now to make his appearance (after hiding himself when they wanted to arrest him, which confirmed the suspicions to some extent), suppose he were to put in an appearance now, he would be reinstated in his office in the nicest way, for he is an officer of the General Staff and ought to be supported, whereas we, the Government, are, of course, incapable of displaying anything but open partiality and arbitrarmess. He could remain in the service l

[According to trustworthy information, de Semitter was one of the chief agents of the conspinacy at Petrograd. There "passed" through his hands those persons who were sent from Headquarters and from the fronts to the capital "for purposes of co operation." He kept one of the secret render ous where the conspirators "reported," and so on The moment before the competent authorities arrived at his flat to scarch it and arrest him, he started for Finland Unfortunately, the technical side of the conspiracy for It is the commission of the Commission of Inquiry That is why the personalities of Zavoiko, Aladin, and similar persons have become excessively prominent in this case. It is only the episode with Krimov that lifts a little the curtain from the technical side of the case This blank may be explained, not only by the great collesion of that mineu which directed but also by the fact that, under the influence of the counter attacks" ("provocations," "imsunderstandings," etc) made at the time, and of the clever empaign of defence carried out in the Press, in conformity to the German rule that "an offensive is the best defensive," the attention of the Commission of Inquiry was, in attention of the Commission of Inquiry was, in spite of themselves, chiefly concentrated on those sides of the affan in which public opinion had taken a particular interest at the time. In the meantime, the possibility of penetrating by the still fresh traces into the very laboratory of the conspinacy vanished. In referring to Semitter.

as a reply to the question about Novossiltsev, I meant to lay stress on my having had no doubt as to Novossiltsev's participation in Kornilov's movement, and to point out at the same time to the Commission of Inquiry what solid grounds we considered absolutely indispensable before proceeding to take measures of precaution by administrative order.

Generally speaking, it may be noticed from the text of the stenogram that at this point of the examination I was speaking in a somewhat initated tone. I confess that I was irritated at the excessive impartiality of some members of the Commission, which was already assuming the shape of an open inclination not to see anything criminal in the activity of the persons who were prosecuted in connection with the Kormlov case. In this mood connection with the Kormiov case. In this move of a part of the Commission I perceived an infringement of the almost single instruction I had given to the Commission of Inquiry at the outset of its work. "to carry on the inquiry without giving way to any outside influences." I think that the whole character of my examination testifies sufficiently to the fact that the Commission was more than free from any "influence" on the part of the Government I was of opinion that even for the sake of its own dignity the Commission should not have allowed its individual members to reveal in their questions traces of the influence of that public opinion which was pro-Kornilovist,

I gave two more instructions to the Commission of Inquiry In my telegram of the 2nd of September, No 8887, addressed to the Chairman of the Commission, in which I referred to the inadmissibility of "influences," I instructed him to early on the inquiry "in the most energetic manner and to finish it in the shortest term." The third and last instruction that was given by me to the Chairman of the Commission, verbally, was to the effect that the Commission of Inquiry should confine its work, when dealing with the military element, to investigating, as far as possible, only the culpability of the chief participators. These two last instructions I gave because I considered it to be indispensable to paralyse within the shortest term the influence upon the army of what was probably the most terrible consequence of Kormlovism, viz the revival within the army of the distrust by the rank and file of the whole body of officers.]

LIQUIDATION OF THE REBELLION 261

§ 28

Chanman—To come back to newspaper para graphs we have had no deposition by Alexeiev, whereas the newspapers mentioned an older given to Colonel Korotkov to take Moinley Was such an order given ?

Kerensky—Yes, it was like this my plan, which happily was accomplished, consisted in settling the Kornilov episode as far as possible in a peaceful manner without any excesses. We summoned General Alexeiev, who undertook this most difficult mission. But precisely at that time we were besteged by a number of—

Chairman -Of demands?

Kerensky—Not only demands, but also items of information, which later proved to have been partly fanciful, such as Mohilev being surrounded by forthfieltions, artiflery and machine guns being placed in position on the slopes of "Governor's Mount" and in the Governor's garden More over, inauthorized detachments of troops began to arise everywhere, tending towards Mohlev in order to suppress Kornilov. Ultimately the Moscow Military District-

Chanman -With regard to the movement of that echelon----

Kerensky—The commander of the Moscow Military District, even after General Alexerev had left for Headquirters, insisted most categorically that he should be allowed to more immediately a mixed detachment of infantry, artillery, and cavalry in the direction of Mohilev, and when Korotkov's detachment appeared at Orsha on its own initiative, I sent a telegram to Colonel Korotkov to the effect that he should prepare and organize an offensive, but should only act in agreement with Alexerev In this way everything was brought into a certain shape

Charman —So that all this movement of separate units, and particularly of the one organized by the Moscow Military District, was duly obeying the Provisional Government?

Rerenshy—We had to act cautiously in certain respects. Personally, I did not particularly believe all these items of information, but at any rate it was necessary to take all these rumours into account. Supposing we had not taken any measures, and afterwards these rumours had turned out to be true, I would then have definitely proved to be "a traitor and a counter revolutionary." The only thing that turned out to be true was that a state of siege had been preclaimed at Mohilev and that a rather serious state of terior had prevailed there. Kornilov declared outright that whoever was against him would be shot Strictly speaking, this saves all the participators of the rebellion, since every one of them is now able to claim that he had been acting under the terror created at Mohiles.

LIQUIDATION OF THE REBELLION 263

[The peaceful settling of Kornilov's rebellion at Headquarters is one of those recollections which afford me the greatest moral satisfaction as at the very outset of the Revolution, it became now necessary to protect at any cost the life of individuals from savage lynchings, and this I did After some hesitation I insisted on General Alexciev's acceptance of the post of Chief of Staff of the Supreme Commander In spite of all the irritation against Alexeiev in large demoeratic circles, notwithstanding his obstinate personal refusals for forty eight hours, until the real correlation of forces had revealed itself, I kept on msisting on his accepting that office, as soon as I realized that only Alexeiev, owing to his connections at Headquarters and to his enormous influence among the higher military circles, could carry out successfully the task of trans-fering the command painlessly into new hands from those of Kornilov If I remember rightly, Alexerev was summoned early in the morning Petrograd, and until the morning of August 27th That night he was already at Petrograd, and until the morning of August 30th he would not give any decisive reply to the offer made to him to take up the office of Chief of Staff Meanwhile, time was passing, the question as to the Supreme Command remained obscure at Headquarters, in the very heart of the army there still remained Kormlov, continuing to issue technical orders All this led to great nervousness among the masses, who had not yet recovered their senses from the pune that had seized them On this ground, the disposition to start "by themselves" to "do away' with Koinilov was growing more iapidly from hour to hour, since the authorities either could not "clear him away" from Headquarters or were "in collusion" with him! The position was becoming truly critical since, not to mention any considerations of humanity and honour, it was impossible to permit the slightest interruption, and still less the shattering, of the work of Headquarters. The procrastination on one side and the nervous insistence on the other were becoming quite imbeanable! I then had to take recourse to orders in the nature of an ultimatum towards those who were dilatory, at the same time restraining the nervous volunteers who were anxious to rush off to "suppress" Kornilov, I shall quote the Hughesogram sent on September 1st by the Chief of my Military Cabinet, Baranovsky, to Headquarters, which accurately describes the state of things at that time

"A F. Kerensky fixed for General Alexciev the term of two hours, which expired at 710 pm, but there is uo answer yet. The Commander-includer of the common o will still be possible. There is no other alternative, A. F. Kerensky expects that statesmanlike wisdom will prompt General Alexerev's decision, and that he will arrive at it immediately: to airest Kormlov and his accomplices. I am writing at the apparatus for a quite definite and the only possible answer, to the effect that the persons who have participated in the revolt will be ariested. You ought to inderstand those political movements which arise from accusing the Government of maction and commance. It is impossible to talk any longer. It is necessary to make up one's mind and to act."

A little later there came the answer from General Alexeiev himself: "About 10 pm. General Kornilov and the others were arrested."

At the same time General Verkhovsky, already Minister of War, requested me, and almost insisted on obtaining permission, to send a whole military expedition to Headquarters, and forwarded the following telegram to Alexeiev —

"I am starting to day for Headquarters with a large armed detachment for the purpose of making an end to that mockery of common sense which is still taking place Kornilov and the others (whose names follow) must be immediately arrested; this is the purpose of my journey, which I consider to be quite indispensable."

The excessive nervousness and aggressive tone of Verkhovsky may perhaps be partly explained by the conversations which he had held on August 24th at Headquarters, as well as by the telegram No 6457 which he had received on August 27th from General Kornilov to the following effect: "At the present threatening moment, for the sake of avoiding eivil war and not to give use to bloodshed in the streets of Moscow, I instruct you to subordinate yourself to me and to earry out my orders henceforth"

To Verkhovsky's repeated inquiries, as well as to those of Colonel Korotkov, I kept on enjoining upon them "to make ready," but not to start without my permission. Only with the greatest effort and by using all my influence and persistence, I managed to avert possible complications at Headquarters. Of course, in General Alexeiev's depositions all this striving of volunteers towards. Headquarters is transformed into some "ill will" which wanted at any price "to push troops against Mohilev." It is not difficult to guess where General Alexeiev is looking for the source of that ill will! Well, no matter Anyhow, General Alexeiev carried out the task of settling the matter at Headquarters with which he had been entrusted A prolonged to operation was impossible for both of us. Alexeiev tendered his resignation, which I accepted without raising objections.

I accepted without raising objections Meanwhile, I cannot help remembering that while I was Generalissimo General Kornilov was constantly guarded, throughout his detention at the Bikhov prison, not only by soldiers, but also by his personal escort of Tekimans, the very same with whom, and with their machine guns, he had come to me at the Winter Paluce Such a double guard was instituted by the Chairman of the Commission of Inquiry, not only to prevent Kornilov from esca ing, but also to protect him from being lynched the soldiers. I well remember how fiercely I was attacked for it by the Press of the Left, and how the future commiser at the savage lynching of N. N. Dukhomin General Bonteh Bruevitch, appeared before me at the head of a deputation from the local Sovict with the demand "to remove the Fekimans from Bikhov," as the revolutionary garrison did not trust them, and to strengthen the gunrd over Kornilov. I felt indignant at such behaviour on the part of a general of the Russian Army who had been in the past one of the most faithful servants of Tsardom, and wanted to remove him from Headquarters, while I also recollect how the honest Dukhonin interceded for him. Such is fate!]

§ 29.

Chairman.—I have no general questions to ask, Perhaps my colleagues have some questions?

Kolokolov.—I have some questions.

Kolokolov.—I have some questions. Krensky.—I wish to accompany my deposition by a general conclusion. I think it will prove very difficult and perhaps impossible for the Commission of Inquiry to establish the actual trend of the events, and the very persons who took part in organizing the Kornilov movement. This is indeed partly the fault of the administration and of our Government, that, owing to the absence of a detective department, we are unable to furnish you with such materials, which the old régime could have supplied you with. We are unable to produce them. But personally, I have no doubt whatever that behind Kornilov there was at work a quite definite group of persons, not only united together for the preparation of the planned conspiracy, but also in possession of large financial means and in a position to draw amounts from the banks. For me there is no doubt whatever about this.

• [General Alexeiev's famous letter to Miliukov of September 12th, which was published on December 12, 1917, in No. 249 of the "Izvestia" of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets of the Workman's and Soldiers' Deputies, has of the Wolkings and Soldiers Deputies, his transformed this subjective conviction of mine, which was not binding upon anybody, into a visible matter of fact which nobody will be able to deny. The mun purpose of General Alexeev's letter elumed to be that of diawing the attention of the "honest Press" to the terrible position. of the "apparent participators in the conspiracy "who hid been arrested in connection with the Konnlov case and whom the "invisible patter pators in the conspiracy," the "masters of the destimes" and the "wnepullers of the inquiry," wanted to commit for trial before the most primi wanted to commit for the before the most primitive of all tribunals, a revolutionary court martial, with its mevitable death sentence. The purpose of such wicked actions on the part of the "inasters of the destines the General explains very simply." The clime of Komilov was no secret to the members of the Government This question had been discussed with Savinkov and Filonenko and been discussed with Savinkov and Filonenko and through them with Keiensky Only a primitive revolutionary court martial could hush up the participation of these persons in the prelimin uv negotiations and agreements. Savinkov has already had to confess it in the Press Keiensky's participation is indisputable. This of all, General Alexieve ought to have started, not merely by asserting, but by proving that very "through them with Kerensky,' since up to that moment nobody in the world, apair from General Alexieve, hid known anything about that 'through Secondly neither before nor after September 12th has Savinkov ever "confessed himself in the Press as guilty of the conspiracy, but only referred to those actual negotiations and agreements which Kormlov did not keep, and which had nothing to do with Komilov's move. On what other ground does General Alexerev base his assertion of my "indisputable" participation ? On the movement of the 3rd Cavalry Corps headed by Kilmov; on Komilov's telegrain No 6391 sent to Saymkov on the night of August 27th at 2.30 a.m., concerning the establishment of martial law at Petrograd; and, lastly, on Lukomsky's telegram No. 6106, referring to an offer made to General Kornilov "m my name" by Savinkov and Lyov. That is all To anybody who has made himself acquainted with this deposition of mme and with my explanations to the same, it must be clear, I think, that it is quite impossible to prove by that evidence my participation in the conspiracy, unless one is to place an intentionally false interpretation on the facts. General Alexeiev could neither ignore the story of the Krimov's corps nor the real menning of Lukomsky's telegram, nor lastly the true reasons for summoning the troops for the disposal of the Provisional Government, since all the documents required for ascertaining the truth were accessible to him in his capacity of Chief of Staff to the Supreme Commander in Chief In any ease, early in Sept-Commander in the land that yease, earry in september, when he was diafting his confidential denunciation, he had the opportunity of receiving every explanation he might have required both from the Chairman of the Commission of Inquity

According to hun, "the invisible participators want to destroy the apparent ones," whom those the heave creything me bound to save Who are they? Alexeev writes thus—

"The Kornilov affair was not the act of a handful of adventuces, it was supported by the sympathy and assistance of large circles among our intellectuals. . . . You, Pavel Nikolaevitch (1e Miliukov), are aware to some extent that certain Milukov), the aware to some extent time considerable circles of our public not only knew about exceptibility, and not only sympathized with the idea, but helped Kormlov as far as they could . . . I have another request; I do not know the address of tessis, W. P. [see p. 122] and others. The families of the imprisoned officers are beginning to staive.

. It is my instant request that they should conic to then assistance. Surely, they are not going to leave to their fate and to staination the families of those to whom they were united by the community of ide is and preparations. I beg you most ungently to take that work upon conriself and to let me know the result. In that matter we officers are more than interested."

The whole tenor of Alexeier's letter would still not have constituted any serious indication of anybody's participation in the Koinilot conspiracy, especially when one takes into consideration General Alexeier's extreme licence in dealing with facts. This "request," however, to render assistance and to start an immediate campaign in favour of the accused in the columns of the "honest Press" was accompanied by an addition which is fatal for those whom he had in tion which is fatal for those whom he had in view "In that case [i.e. if Alexiev's request is not immediately compled with], General Kornilov will be compelled to unfold extensively before the court all the preparations, all the negotiations with persons and bodies, as well as their participation, in order to show the Russian people with whom he was acting, what were the real aims he was pursuing, and how at the critical moment, abandoned by all, he appeared with a small number of officers before a hurried tribunal.

This is the substance of my appeal to you."

When one is not in possession of any weighty proofs, even blackmailers do not accompany appeals for assistance by such unequivocal threats of exposure! I shall not touch upon the moral side of such a method of appealing, especially as General Alexeiev was evidently better acquainted with the milieu he was addressing than myself At any rate, in the "Retch" of December 13, 1917, the writer of the leading article is of opinion that Aleveiev's letter contains nothing of a compromising nature, and that "it reflects the extraordinary purity and nobility of its author" Indeed, there are various conceptions of nobility and purity! The writer of that leading article makes haste, of course, to identify himself with "Alexeiev's per feetly correct view on Keiensky's double position" in the Koimilov affair I shall not follow, in their methods of political warfare, either Alexeiev of the organ of Milukov I repeat once more that the letter of Alexeiev, which is so fatal for the parti cipatois and organizers of the Kornilov move, should under no circumstances be taken advantage of as an instrument for combating whole parties and groups of the population l

§ 30

Liber—Only one question, Alexander Feodoro witch When the Government was about to establish martial law at Petrograd, did it not consider that it might meet with opposition, or at any rate with a sharply negative attitude on the part of the Soviets, and if so, did it not intend to take some measures of precaution?

Kerensky —I may say that if within the Government the Bolsheviks were spoken about, there were no conversations whatever about the Soviets, which at that time were far from being Bolshevik, or about the Central Executive Committee.

Liber .- I must say definitely that according to Savinkov's evidence this consideration has played a great part. He states positively that one might a great part. He since positively that one lingui-line expected opposition precisely on the part of the Soviet, and if such a supposition could be entertained, then the presence of a corps would come useful in such an emergency as well. It is of importance to us to establish whether the Government has been discussing such a contingency or not

or not [In order to make clear the kind of opposition on the part of the Soviets to which Savinkov had referred, I quote the corresponding extract from the minutes composed by General Kornilov, Lukomsky, and Romanovsky, "About the stay of the Deputy Minister of War at Mohilev during the 23rd and the 24th of August." These minutes were drafted subsequently to August 27th, and consequently under conditions most favourable for setting out the words of Savinkov as near as possible to the intentions of Headquarters. According to these minutes, Savinkov said to Kornilov. "You know, of course, that approxymately on "You know, of course, that approximately on the 28th or 29th of August a Bolshevik move is expected at Petrograd. The publication of your demands carried out through the Provisional Government would of course serve as an impulse for the Bolsheviks to make their move, if for some for the Boishevius to make their move, it has some leason or another they might otherwise have had to postpone it. Though we have enough troops it our disposal, we cannot altogether count upon them, all the more so as we do not know vet what will be the attitude of the Soviet of the Soldiers. and Workmen's Deputies towards the new law

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE SOVIETS 278

The Soviet might also prove to be against the Government, and in such case we could not count upon our troops. If, besides the Bolsheviks, the members of the Soviet of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies should also come out, we would have to act against them as well."

Even from the above exposé of Savinkov's words, it is clear that he was only speaking of the Soviets conjecturally, with regard to their attitude to the future law, which at that time had not even been discussed by the Provisional Government. But seeing that within the Provisional Government there were representatives of the Central Executive Committee of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies, it is evident that even this hypothetical contingency was an impossibility, since either the Military Bill would have been adopted in a shape acceptable to the whole of the Coalition, and consequently to the Soviets as well, or the Coalition Government would have ceased to exist before the adoption of the Bill.

When Savinkov came to know about these minutes which had been drawn up nost factum and in his absence, he made the following note on the text of the same: "I never used such words as 'the demands of General Kornilov'; nor did it ever occur to me that the Soviets of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies would be certain to act against the Provisional Government should disorders arise. I persisted in the argument that the 3rd Cavalry Corps I was asking for from the Commander-in-Chief, at the request of the Provisional Government to defend the Government against any hostilities, no matter from what quarter. If at the moment of a Bolshevik rising the Soviets of the Workmen's and Soldiers'

Deputies should happen to be Bolshevik, then the 3rd Cavairy Corps would be used against those Soviets as well "!

Keensky—You will perceive by the composition of the Government that there could not have been any conversation about the Central Executive Committee of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Deputies, nor about the Soviet as such Noi had it ever been intended to establish martial law metal forms as might be odious to public opinion at large. Lastly, if any conversations concerning the Bolsheviks did occur (as you know, there were rumours in circulation as to the possibility of a repetition of the events of the 3rd-3th of July), it was assumed that the Bolsheviks would stand on one side, "thile the whole country would stand on the other side (against them)

§ 31.

Koloholov—Allow me to put a question You have stated, sir, that there is no evidence of a nature to establish with complete exactitude the existence of a conspuacy, still, have you any grounds, the verification of which might be necessary for the Commission of Inquiry?

Kerenshy—I can only tell you to ask U T Terestchenko, the Minister of Foreign Alfars, whether he recollects a convensation he repeated to me, in which Zavotko had been speaking of the means 't they " had at their disposal for over throwing the Government

[During my wanderings after the 25th of Oetober, I met a person who told me that he liad eertam knowledge of similar conversations held by Zavoiko at the beginning of last year]

I must say, however, that nt present it is very difficult generally to give information. From the very moment of the Revolution, people have quite cased to distinguish in our persons the Government from private individuals; any information we possess in our capacity as menthers of the Government very rapidly becomes the property of the man in the street, and is turned into a means of settling personal accounts, or into demonds for proofs personal accounts, or into demands for proofs on the part of the persons interested, and so on. With regard to a conspiracy's being organized by a group of military inen, of officers, we had very exact information, and we were watching its participators as far as we could do so. The Kornlov events have shown that we did know something. A portion of the Council of the Union of the Cossack Armies possessed, moreover, a great deal of "information" as well. I have no doubt whatever about that, too, but there again the thing cannot yet be proved formally; and so on. For many considerations, however, it is not desirable to carry on an investigation in that direction (among the nultary) at present; and this for the simple reason that its results would be a poor compensation for its inevitable consequences, to judge by the present temper of the masses We do not wish, and I am personally averse from it, to provide new occasions for strife between various groups of the population, since a group, as such, is not responsible for the acts of individual persons

Kolokolov.-What were your grounds for arresting Lvov?

Kerensky.—It was quite clear to me from the whole conversation that he knew much more than he was saying. I took it that he was warning me at the last moment of the danger to my person either because he had sniply got frightened or, perhaps, because his conscience had spoken. After all, he had experienced nothing but good treatment from ine. But the mood in which he retired from the Provisional Government pointed to the possibility of his having gone against me from the outset. Then again, how about Aladin's Limit outset whether you are aware of Aladin's visit to Prince G. E. Laov at Moscow. Just before V. Laov called on me, Virubov informed me, on behalf of Prince G. L. Laov, that Aladin had called on the Prince, to whom he said quite seriously. "Let kerensky bear in mind that hence forward there inust be no changes within the Government without the consent of Headquarters." This had made an impression on the Prince Now, with regard to agrarian reform. I was aware that they were engaged in preparing an agrarian manifesto on law, I forget the name of that Professor from Moscow.

Chairman —Y—-v

Kerensky -All this goes to confirm that prepar ations were going on

Uhantsev -Commg to your statement that on the question of the conspiracy you had a reel' of information from two sources onc of which was trustworthy, while the other was not rehable, could you not let us have it? This would enable us to find out the conspiracy

Kerensly—No I may repeat that one set of information came from the agents and the other from the counter espionage. There was also a third source and subsequently a fourth one I handed over that officer to the Intelligence Depart ment. What was his name though? Oh yes, V—m. He had also come to warn me that I was threatened by an imment—

Uhramisev—Was it not the same officer who used to move in Cossack encles and who denounced Zavoko?

Keenshy—Yes About Zavoiko unfavourable news reached us long before. He is altogether a man with a rather queer past. His stay and the part he played at Headquarters were strange and unintelligible. Still, that was the man who exercised the greatest influence upon General Koinlov, At the South-western front, Savinkov had once succeeded in removing him from there, as Zavoiko's influence was aheady injurious at the time. But he afterwards returned, and was, inorcover, joined by Aladin.

[On his relations to Zavoiko, General Kormlov's evidence was to the following effect —

"I made the acquamtance of V S Zavoiko m April last at Petrograd According to the information in my possession, he was a few years ago the Marshal of Nobility of the Haysin district, in the Government of Podolia. He had been working at the naphtha mines round Baku, and, as he told me, was engaged in exploring the mineral resources of Turkestan and Western Siberia. In the month of May he arrived at Telernovitsi and, after having joined as a volunteer the Daguestan eavalry regiment, he remained at the Staff of the aimy in the capacity of my personal orderly. He wields the pen with perfection. I therefore entrusted him with the drafting of those orders and documents that required a particularly vigorous and attistic style."

I have had to refer more than once to the proclamation "To the Russian People," which is a splendid specimen, not only of the artistic style, but also of the cuming hands of Zavoiko. It may be seen from all the circumstances of the case that the position of Zavoiko, in the circles near to Kornilov, had nothing to do with his modest dentity stood Zavoiko in good stead in the way of promoting the flow of those means to Head quarters about which information could be imparted by W and P, who are mentioned in General Alexeier's letter, as well as by the editors of several newspapers and leaflets which were batting me so strenuously throughout the summer and glorifying General Kormlov Zavoiko is one of the shadiest and most repulsive figures among the conspirators, and it is difficult to understand wherein lay the secret of his influence upon Kornilov 1

§ 32

Ukraintset -- You stated, among other things, that an offer of a dictatorship was made to you, and that you afterwards met the same persons among those by whom Kornilov was surrounded Who were those persons?

Kerensky - Conversations of that kind emanated from the same Cossack circles Then, some public men----

Ukraintsev -This means that you are able to point out the circles, but no single person?

Keensky—I should not care to point them out

Krokhmal—But this did not bear the shape of a formal offer, it was, so to say, in the nature of advice?

Kerensky —They would introduce it in this way
"If you were to agree we should 'and so on But it always fell on fuitless soil Let us leave them alone I

Ukraintsev -In that case, it may be that the very offers did not bear the character of a concrete proposition?

Keiensky.—No; when this "public opinion" became disappointed with me as a possible organizer and chief worker for a change in the system of Government in the direction of a "strong authority," they then started to look out for another "man." I consider that the longing for finding a man was very strong. Even on August 26th, V. Lvov thus expressed himself when conversing with somebody: "He would not agree to be a dictator, so we shall give him one!"

to be a dietator, so we shall give him one!"

Liber.—Has it been reported to you that on the question you are referring to, and which was then being discussed, Kerensky, Savinkov, and Kornilov were named as candidates?

Keronsky.—Yes. Generally speaking, they were teeling the ground. After my refusal, some of them thought that the best I could do was "to get away," "not to interfere," and "not to sluffle the eards." Though they themselves were predicting that my retirement would be followed by a period of Bolshevik violenee, they were nevertheless of opinion that this would afford them an opportunity of triumphing in the end. Kornilov was simply the unsuccessful executor of other, people's plans, for in order to create a real dictatorship in Russia, one had to possess not only the "heart of a lion," but also some intellectual qualities which are neither given to all nor frequently to be met with.

[General Kormlov's personal qualities rendered his whole attempt to establish in Russia a personal dictatorship too naive and thoughtless for it to be able to count upon even a momentary success. But even any other adventure, conceived more seriously and carried out more intelligently, would mentably have come to the same end, after a more or less prolonged period of struggle; or it would itself have finally broken up the State and opened the gates to the Germans, as was actually done two months after Kormlov by the marchist Bolsheviks, who were politically more experienced and clever. The tragedy of the position of Russia at the end of the summer of 1917 lay processly m its not having yet attained such political maturity as would have afforded to its leading political encles the possibility of realizing to the very end and of carrying through the only system of organizing the State authority which alone could still have stopped the threatening process of the collapse of the State, which had commenced together with the world-war, viz. the system of confitton between all the political parties that were holding to the idea of a State, in order to create a common national Government. The condition of the economic organism and of the technical apparatus of the State had made it impossible to govern the country during wan by the strength of any immority what-socyen, which is always and inevitably reduced to applying political terror as the sole means of keeping the majority in subjection. The stern reality which showed imperatively to all the con-scious and responsible elements of the country the only way for saving the State, by subordinating all the interests and claims of the different classes and strate of the population to the needs of the State, united all those elements willy-nilly round the Provisional Government Any minority that made up its mind to combat the Government would necessarily be found in the end to be in alliance either with the home grown reaction or with its variety from across the frontier We have seen what equivocal elements, in both the political and the social sense, were surrounding Kornilov More recently we have seen something still worse we have seen how the only "Communists" in the world have saved Prussian Junkerdom, to whom they have enslaved, both politically and in the world have saved Prussian Junkerdom, to whom they have enslaved, both politically and economically, the Russian toiling masses. Unfortunately, the leading political eircles, which could not help recognizing that the coalition was indispensable, did not support it actively and fairly. They were only rather afraid to take upon themselves the political responsibility for the formal collapse of that system, while in their own mind they were waiting for a "saviour," whom some expected from the Right and others from the Left. In their "joyless love" of the Coalition they were dicaming of a "painless parting". They were waiting all the time for the moment when I should "leave" at last, while they themselves would not let me go, as they were they themselves would not let me go, as they were afraid of the responsibility But while retaining arraid of the responsibility. But while retaining me, they wanted somebody to come and overthrow me, in the hope of taking advantage of somebody else's crime for then own political interests. From October 24th to November 1st I observed From October 24th to November 1st I observed that trembling expectation among my "friends" of the Left, just as I had noticed the same trembling expectancy in the Kornilov days among some of the "adherents of the Coalition" on the Right Those who accuse me of not having "left" in time, and of having somehow stood in somebody's way, ought to remember once for all that I had never sought power, nor did I hold on to it I only interfered with usurpers and adventurers Politically responsible circles, far from meeting with an impediment on my part, had they wished the protection of the contraction of

Their love was joyless, their parting will be painless? (From Russian poetry)

to form a Government without me, received re-peated proposals from me to do so. Even a month before the Bolshevik using, at a secret session of the Bureau of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies, jointly with the Prasidium of the Democratic Conference and the representatives of all the Socialist parties, including the Bolsheviks, I raised the question as to the attitude of those present towards the Government, and declared that on my part I would do everything that was possible for the namless and rapid transition of the State to a new system of Government, if those attending the meeting would take upon themselves the responsibility for dissolving the themselves the responsibility for dissolving the condition with the propertied classes and point out a person willing to accept the task of forming a newly composed Provisional Government, as I personally could not carry out the task conscientiously. But the meeting did not prove sufficiently resolute and hold to undertake the responsibility for all the consequences of creating a "homogeneous Government." At the last Conference of the Social Revolutionary Party, one member of its Central Committee put the matter thus -

"When one considers the helpless condition in which the democracy found itself (after the Democratic Conference), it will be perceived that it had not the strength for organizing the Government in any other way than by handing it over to Kerensky The conclusion to be drawn from it comes to this a sacrifice had to be made to the belief of the masses that it was possible to do everything, whereas really it is impossible to do everything Still, that sacisfice was needed We accordingly sacrificed Kerensky, who put up with being the vietim, well knowing what was in store for him "

This was not, however, a sacrifice, but the conscious execution of one's duty to the very end I saw that nobody was willing honestly to support that form of Government by which alone it would that form of Government by which alone it would be possible to preserve the State from falling to preces But I could not, to save my own skin, meet the elemental force half way and bring the explosion nearer, even by a single day, through my retirement Moreover, in my heart there was still a glimmer of hope that the demociacy would prove able to overcome all that is dark and brutish in itself!

§ 38

Ukraintsev -In describing the conversation with V Lvov, you mentioned that he made a proposal in the form of an ultimatum, but have you not noticed that in his written report he had replaced the phiase "General Kornilov demands" by "General Koinilov proposes"?

Keensky—If I had noticed it, I should have said to him "Write it down just as you said it" But I merely folded the paper and put it in my poeket

[Strictly speaking, there is no difference what ever between "Kornilov demands" or "proposes" I myself used often to write . "I propose to So and-So to do this "]

**Ukraintsev**—You only paid attention to the points?

Kerensky -Yes, just to the points, and then

I put it in my pocket. The very circumstances of the conversation were so convincing to me. Indeed. I never dreamt at the time that public opinion would ever see fit to make me out a sort of accomplice of the Kornilov conspiracy or of a rather unintelligible and equivocal personage. Had I been able to foresee anything of the kind, I should perhaps have arranged everything quite differently on that particular evening. But, at any rate, I consider that I did all that was essential by nipping the attempt in the bud with extraordinary rapidity.

Ukraintsev.—Were you in possession of any information to the effect that General Kornilov had precisely charged the 3rd Corps with an attack against the Provisional Government, or was such an attack only discerned in the movement upon Petrograd ?

Petrograd?

Kerensky.—No, I discerned it in the position that was occupied by Krimov, and also in the fact that, contrary to the decision arrived at, the "Savage Division" was on its way to Petrograd. All their calculations were generally based on the "Savage Division." It seems to me that Lvov has simply exploded the whole thing. He perhaps let the cat out of the bag a day or two too early [or blabbed out more and in a different tone than he ought to have done]. Had Krimov's detachment managed to get here, it would not have proved so easy to disnose of it, seeing that have proved so easy to dispose of it, seeing that in such a case there would have come into play those forces that were waiting here for events to develop, that is to say, those messengers who had gathered here, and those groups which had been organized for the purpose of rendering aid at the right moment from the reor.

Ukraintsev.-Did you have the impression from Savinkov's report on army reforms that greater importance was attributed to them from a general political point of view than from the purely military one?

Kerensky.—On August 10th I accepted Savinkov's resignation because I considered his report to be an unwarranted act on the part of a man whom I had myself put into a responsible post. I was set before an accomplished fact.

It is altogether evident that Savinkov wanted at all eosts to unite me and Kornilov in spite of ourselves. It seems to me that Savinkov and Filonenko land been taken advantage of in the whole affair. Savinkov never aspired at doing away with the Provisional Government or with myself. He never had such a plan. But he magined himself to be the eleverest of all, whereas in reality there were people found who outwitted him. He was only an instrument that was made to do its share in the work that was earried on round Kornilov.

[In his deposition Savinkov confirmed my conjectures, when he said: "Though I witnessed all these increasingly strained relations, I did not give up the hope that, by working together, A. F. Kerensky and General Kornilov would manage to realize a firm revolutionary Government, and I endeavoured with all my strength to bring about a rapprochement between A. F. Kerensky and General Kornilov."]

Ukraintsev.—One more question concerning the conversation that took place on returning from Headquarters after the Conference of July 16th. Did not Filonenko propose the formation of a special War Cabinet within the Provisional Government?

Kerensky -Not to my recollection I had no conversations whatever with him. I remember the conversation held here on August 29th As I said before, I ilonenko was indeed endeavouring, with the help of Saymkov, to transform the conversation held at Headquarters about a dietatorship into one which might be represented as dealing with a subject which had also been talked about within the Provisional Government, viz a War Cabinet But the one was as distant from the other as heaven from earth, and they had nothing One must be, or m common between them pretend to be, an idiot to suggest scriously that either the Provisional Government or myself could ever think of Filonenko as a possible member of the Provisional Government It is not only an ribsurd, but a ridiculous supposition! It was merely an awkward expedient for getting out of a foolish position I repeat once more that Tilonenko did have a conversation with Kor nilov, but that it had nothing to do with a "War Cabinet "

Chairman -Allow me to thank you, sir, for your

[Whoever reads my evidence to the end will understand what a will and what faith in the final triumph of truth one had to possess in order silently to bear all the furious baiting that was going on To look on in silence while the poison of doubt was penetrating ever deeper into the very masses of the people, severing one by one my close relations with them, to see how even the most conscious circles of democracy were unable to grasp the reasons for the Government's silence, which they mistook for a confirmation of "revelations" that had produced the impression of convincing "internal evidence." (I quote from resolutions of the Bureau of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies of September 12th.)

Who has raised his voice in the defence of the men who were being hunted down with impunity, merely because, in the fulfilment of their duty to the State and to the public, they kept silent, bound as they were by the secrecy of the Inquiry, which was shamelessly broken by the others? It is only now that I have obtained the possibility to put in my word.

Too late, as it seems. The work has been done. The words I uttered at the Moseow Conference have turned out to be true: "If the people should prove short of sense and conscience, then the Russian State will perish, flooded by a wave of collapse, disintegration, and treachery."

And the people newly born to freedom, so great in the past, but now deceived and degraded, is dancing and grimacing in a repulsive fool's cap before its cruel master of Berlin.

But do not lose heart! Do not curse the popular masses; do not desert them. Go to the people with words of stern truth; rouse its slumbering conscience, and, sooner than you think, its manliness will revive and rekindle the sacrificial flame of its love of Motherland and Freedom!]

A "WHO'S WHO" AND "WHERE'S WHERE" OF PEOPLE AND PLACES OCCURRING IN THE TEXT

Aladin.-Member (for the Govern ment of Simbirsk) of the first Duma Belonged to the Toil Party. Acquired popularity and tenovu through his speeches in the Dums. On the eve of the dissolution of the first Duma. Aladin went to England as a member of the delegation sent by the Duma for the purpose of conveying its message of sym nathy to the British Parliament. and when the Duma was dissolved he remained in that country His subsequent activity was of such a character that it changed altogether the attitude towards Aladin of his Political friands, so that he coon lost his prestige and even the esteem he formerly anioved in the Russian demo cratio and intellectual circles During the latter yeers of his solourn in England ha even be came the London correspondent of the Novoic Vremia Aladin has been formally struck out from the rolls of the Toil Party In the summer of 1917 Aladin returned to Russia

Mexilev—General Professor at tha General Staff Acedamy Ona of the highest military authorities in Europe Played a prominent port in the Russo-Japanese War During the first period of the present wer, under the Grand Duke Nicholas as Commander in Chief, General Alexeiav di rected the operations of the North-western front and distinguished himself by his organizing ability and by the akill with which he managed to extricate his troops from awkward and critical posttions After the grave situation of 1915, when the Grand Duke Nicholas was relieved of the post of Goneralissimo, General Alexesay took over the Supreme Command in the capacity of Chief of the Staff of the nominal Commander in Chief - the late Teer Nicholas At the decisive moment of the Revolution, Alexaley lent his support to the Duma and, together with other generals. advised the Tear to abdicate according to the demand of the The Provisional Governmant appointed Alexeiev Com mander in Chief, which office he held until the end of May 1917 Immediately after Kornilov's rebellion, Alexeiev resumed for short period his military activity in the capacity of Chief of the Staff of the Generalissimo. Kerensky, however, he only remained in this office for a fortnight, when his place was taken by General Dukhonin

Altvater.—Rear Admiral. In 1916
Altvater, then a captein, served in the Naval Steff at the Tsar'a Headquarters. In 1917 was attached to the Commandor of the Army Group of the Northern front Aller the Bobbentk coup d'étal. Alter the Bobbentk coup d'étal. Alter securité servée under the Bobhouk Government and participated, in an "expert" capacity, in the Brest Litouk urgotiations After that Igno minious action Alter that Igno minious action Alter that Igno to collaborate with Tratky Avksentley .- A leader of the Social Royolutionary Party In 1905 was a member of the Petrograd Soviet of Workmen's Deligates Was arrested by the Witte ad ministration in November of that yeer, together with other members of the Soviet, and de ported to Siberis, whence ho escaped and fled abroad Untif the smnest; of 1917 Avksen tiev lived abroad, chiefly in France, taking on ective part in the life of Social Royolutionary centres and the party Press Not long before the war, Avk sentiev with his friends founded a poper Potchin ( The Begin ming"), an organ of Social Revolutionary revisionism. which he emphasized the neces city of bringing Socialist prin ciples into agreement with the ideas of State and nationality . he also struggled against the internationalist extremism in his perty During the war, Avksen tiev, together with Plekhanov and other Russian Socialist sun porters of national defence. storted a paper. Prizie ( * The Appeal'), of a sharply pro war and anti Germancherscter, which emphasized the liberating effect of the war on Russia and the meviteble downfall of the auto cracy On his return to Russian in the spring of 1917. As keentiev became one of the foremost representatives of that wing of the Social Revolutionary Party which supported national defence and national interests The first All Russian Congress of Peasants elected Asksention as Chalrman of the Central Commettee of Peasunts Avksentiav became a member of the Provisional Covernment as representative of the peasants' He took organizations portfolio of Minister of the Interior, in which office he remained until the beginning of Septembor The Council of the Republic (e sort of provisional Parliament consoked by the Government to ast until the Constituent Assembly mot) elected Asksenticv An ardent patriot Chairman and supporter of the national defence. Avksentiov was a bitter enemy of Bolshovism, it is no wonder that after their victory the Bolshovske sought him out everywhere and, when at last they found him at Petrograd, imprisoned him in the fortress of SS Peter and Paul Avksentiav was elected to the Constituent Assembly by several constitu

Bagration—Prince A fighting general During the summer of 1917 and the Kornilov rebellion ha was in command of the Caucasian native division ("the savage qivision")

encios

Bagratuni.—General Officer of the General Staff, pertucipated in the present war From the early summer of 1917 until the Boishe vik coup d'état he was Chief of Staff of the Petrograd Military Distret

Baku.—A town in Transcaucasia, on the cost of the Caspian Sec, centre of exceedingly rich oil wells

Balavinsky—A barrister 4 well known Moscow public men Has teken part for meny yeers in the revolutionery movement Bolonged to the Social Revolutionary Party, and has been proseouted by the police. Has worked much during the war in public organizations under the Provisional Government. Has been invited by the Ministry of the Interior to act as one of the Directors in charge of the organization of the local administrative and police services.

Baluley.—Genoral. Officer of the General Staff During the sum mer of 1914 was in command of a special strmy on the South western (Sebician) front Later he was oppointed Commender of the Nestern front, in which office he remained until the Bolshevik coup d'état

Baranovsky .-- General Officer of the General Staff A fighting general Fought in many bettles in the Carpathians and East Prussia During 1916 Bara novsky was active in the Staff of the General Headquarters of the Commander in Chief Kerensky became Minister of War, Baranovsky was summoned hy him to Petrograd and ap pointed chief of the Minister's mulitary cabinet In September 1917 Baranovsky exchanged this post for that of Quartermester General of the Northern front After the Bolshevik revolt he was arrested in Pakov and imprisoned m the fortress of SS Peter and Paul, where he remained for several months

Berditchey.—An important Jewish town, after the retreat from Galicia it was the residence of the Headquarters of the South western front

Bernadsky.--Professor Specialist on financial questions Took port in the liberation movement of 1005 One of the founders of the Radical Democratic Party. which began to grow after the Revolution and stroy o to organize the consistently republican and democratic, although non socialist, elements of the Russian urban population In July 1917 Bornadsky was appointed Deputy Minister to Nelrassov, the Min seter of Finance, in September. after the Kermley rehellion, he became a member of the Provisional Government as the Minister of Finance After the Bolshovik coun d'état, Bernadsky was arrested and imprisoned the fortress of SS Peter and Paul

Bikhov.—A small town not far from Mehilov where the GH Q were estuated Thas town was selected for the confinement of General Kormilov and has ac complices up to the time of their trial In the first days after the Bolshovik soup detat, Kornilov and his firends escaped from Bikhov to the Don

Bontch - Brusevitch - General Officer of the General Staff Was a close collaborator General Ruzsky After latter's retirement he remained Chuef of the Staff of the Northern front until the beginning of September He is a brother of the writer Bontch Brusevitch (a prominent Bolshevik and a close collaborator of Lemn) After the Bolshevik coup d'état the general, until recently a zealous servant of the Tsardom, managed to adapt himself to the "Com munist" Government General Bontoh Brusevitch, together with Trotsky, Knienko, and other Belshevik military authorities, has had a hand in all ignominious acta of the Bolsheviks.

Brussliev .- General, One of the most brilliant tighting commonders of the Russian army. famous for his remarkable offeneive in Galicia in the year 1966. which not only proved a serious blow to the Austrian army on the Russian front, but also saved the Italian army from the (up to then) successful offensive of the Austro Germana though far from being equal to Alexuev in inilitary knowledge and theoretical qualification for his high post, Brussilov was endowed with qualities mesting abloln an array leader initiative. boldness, and a talent for rousing the spirit of his soldiers After the defeats of 1915, Brussley becan to sympathize with the liberation movement, supported the public organizations in their work at the front, and, on the eve of the Revolution, was in touch with representatives of the opposition groups of the Duma When the Revolution broke out. Brusules took openly and unhesitatingly the side of the people, thereby preserving to a considerable extent the South wostern front (Gabera) from anarchy and disaggregation In May 1917 the Provisional Government, on the instictive of A F Kerensky (who then accepted the portfolio of Minister of Werl, appointed Brussilov Commander in Chief Under his direction the Russian Revolutionary Army took the offensive on the 1st of July 1917 It met with a serious check towards the end of that month, and General Brussilov, tired and overworked. was relieved by the Provisional Government of the Suprema Command, which was entrusted. on the mitiative of A F Keren sky, to General Kormlov Dur ing the bombardment of Moscow by the Bolsheviks, Brussilov was seriously wounded by a piece of shrapnel penetrating into lus room, and one of lus legs had to be amoutated

Buhlikov.—Important man of husness Graduato of the Institute of Ways and Communications Was member of the fourth Duma Whon the Ros-clution broke out, Bublikov, on an order of the Duma Committee, occupied with a detachment the Ministry of Ways and Communications and the Central Railway Telegraph, there by accelerating the "winding up" of the old returns

Dan (Gurylich).-A leader of the Social Domocratic Party (Men shovika), a publicist, momber of the modical profession ing the war was deported to Castern Sibona in the "adminis trative manner" (16 without 6 court trial) From the first days of the Revolution was one of the loaders of the Petroprail Sought After Tchkheidze left for the Coucasus, Dan acted as Chair men of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets To gether with the majority of his party (Vensheviks), Dan recog mized the necessity both of con tinuing the war and of the Socialist parties' participating in a "bourgeois" Government, although personally he was far from being a warm supporter of these principles.

Do Semitter.—Colonel of the General Staff Participated in the officers' plot (Particulars in the book)

Dibenka.—Sailor of the Baltic Fleet Prominent agent of Lenn and Trotsky at Helengfors After the Bolshevik coup detat was appointed People's Commissary of Marino Among the Bolthout, ageots this ignormat demagogue has been conspicuous for his impudement and cruelty After the Brest Litosky pasce he quarrelled with Frotsky and started a demagogue campaiga against him in the navy. If was accused by the Bolslevik authorities of einbezzling public money.

Dolgoruky.—Prince General pur ticipated in the present war In August 1917 was in command of the army corps stationed in Linland

Dukhenin -General One of the most brilliant amongst the Jounger officers of the General Staff look a very active and important part in the planning and execution of Brusulov's offensive in Galicie in 1916 the year 1917 Dukhonin, then Chief of the Staff of the South western front, organized the July offensive Dukhonin was en dowed with ac extraordinary organizing ability. He was 10 timately acquainted with the conditions of life of the common soldiery and understood their mentahty, so that he managed to get un very well with his soldiers, while fully safeguarding the authority and the dignity of a Chief Shortly after Lerensky became Commander in Chief Dukhonin was appointed his Chief of Staff He then pro ceeded, together with General Diedrichs (now commanding the Tehekho Slovak troops in Russia). to work out a scheme for tha reorganization of the Russian army in order to have its fighting capacity restored by the spring of 1918 The Bolshevik revolt put an end to this work at its very beginning, as to General Dukhonin himself, he met a martys's death at the very moment of his departure from his Headquarters after they had been captured by the Bolshoviks. He was torn to precess by an infuriated mob of Bolshoviks asilers, in the presence of the Bolshovik "military authorities"—Krienke of their head who looked on without interfecture.

Dutov.—A Cosaack Chairman of the Council of the All Russian Union of Cossackdom Has carried on an aggressive campaign against the Provisional Government Ataman of the Orenburg Cossackdom post to the organizing of a toxic-ment in the troops against the Provisional Government Government of the Orensisonal Government.

Erdelli.-General An exemplary Guards officer During the third year of the war commanded on army at the South western front A typical representative of the huch military bureaucracy, who tesesgod to adapt himself for some time to the new state of things io the army After the Revolution and before Aumist 1917. Erdelli was considered as oce of the liberal generals ood a friend of the elected soldiers' organizations However, after the appointment of General Denikin to the post of Comman der of the South western front, Erdelli sharply changed his policy and joined the military reaction

Gobetchia.—Member of the Social Resolutionary Party, lived for many vesar in France as a political refugee After the March Revolution he returned to Russia and went to the front, in the capacity first of the deputy of Savinkov, the commissary of the 7th Army, then of the commissary of that army Gotz, A .- Prominent member of the Social Revolutionary Party and member of the Central Committee of that party At the time of the old regime was a member of the terrorist organization of the Social Revolu tionery Party Belongs to that sung of the Social Revolutionary Party which is clearly in favour of national defence ("Ohor ontzy ") Supported the ides of a Coalition Government returned to Russia after the Revolution from Siberia, where he was imprisoned with hard labour

Gutchkov, A. T .- A representative of the wealthy Moscow merchant circles of old standing. One of the foremost Moscow Conserva tive public men During the Japanese War, Gutchkov was the representative at the front of the Red Cross Fought in the South African War es s voluntoer in the Doer srmy During the liberation movement of 1905-6 Gutchkov placed him self at the head of the bourgeous elements which opposed that movement At the municipal and Zematyo congresses he always fought the influence of the Cadet Party Was a decided adversary of any kind of self government of the small nationalities of Russia He oven was opposed to an autonomy of Poland, and approved of Stolepia's hostile policy towards Finland Outch kov founded the 'Party of the 17th of October ' (date of the famous Tear a Manifesto in 1905) usually called the 'Octobrist Party Gutchkov approved of all the reactionary measures of the Government in 1305, and with his and his party's authority supported the dissolution of the second Duma and the illegal restrictions of the electoral rights of the people, enforced by Stolipin on the 3rd of June 1907 this coup d'état, Gutchkov, together with his party, entered the third Duma, where he was the leader of the majority nearly for the whole time of its existonce, and at one period was the Speaker of that Duma As a member of the Dums, Gutchkov worked much in the and Navy Commission, made many a disclosure concorning the shady aspects of the military hureaucracy also struggled against generals of the type of Sukhomlinov, and against irresponsible and dis astrous interference of Grand Dukes in military affairs Gutchkov organized a group of military men who railied to him, and thereby he gained from the Tear the name of Young Turk" In internal politics Gutchkov opergetically supported Stolipin, m whom he saw s strong weapon for the purpose of establishing in Russia a very moderate, strictly hour-Vilgrange lagoutetitages coss The ever growing irresponsible influence of the nobility and Court ercles in the Government. which was quickly relapsing into frankly sutocratio ways, the servility of Stohpin himself. drave the very prudent and cunning Gutchkov towards the end of the third Duma into making speeches in the opposition spirit with steadily increasing frequency Beaten at the elections for the fourth Duma in the Moscow constituency, Gutchkov became a member of the State Council, to which he was elected by the Curia of Industry and Commerce The regums of a Rasputin, a Sukhom lines and a Sturmer reconciled Gutehkov to the political tendencus against which he was struggling a short time before, if it did not bring him nearer to During the war, being at the head of the War Industries Committee, Gutchkov came in touch even with cortain Labour circles While travelling at the front. Gutchkov strongthened his old connections and established now ones amongst the High Command circles, which con nections would have proved extremely useful in the event of a well planaed and a prudont comp d ftai The outburst of the Reve lution brought confusion into this game, but at first did not robuff Gutchkov, who, notwithstand ing lus open monarchisin, en tered the first Provisional Government, naturally as the Minister for War Such was the elemen tary force of the pressure of the soldier masses at the beginning of the Revolution, that it was the lot of Gutchkov, a Conservative and a partisus of strictest discipline, to sanction measures which resulted in de stroying that discipline The trial proved too much for him, and foreseeing what would be the results of his own decrees, the prudent and cunning Gutchkov abandoaed his deagerous post in good time

Gutor.-General Was in command of an army on the South western front under Brussilov In the spring of 1917, when Brussilov was appointed Commander in Chief, Gutor, upon the recom mendation of the letter, was en trusted with the command of the bouth western (Gelician) front. which he held when the July offensive began After the Gor man break through at Tarnopol Gutor was deprived of his command for reasons explained " later in the book itself, and his place was taken by General Kornilov

Inkubaylich .- General. A young officer of the General Staff. Took part in the Japanese War, particularly in the defence of Port Arthur At the most critical mement of the Revolution. lakubovitch, together with a low other officers of the General Staff, reported to the Revolutionary Committee of the Duma and put himself at its disposal for the fight for freedom lakub. evitch was appointed member of the Military Commission of the Duma, of which the object was to direct the local garrison and to settle questions relative to military matters, until such timo as the normal activity of the Ministry of War and of the local military institutions was complotely resumed When Koron sky became Minister of War. lakubovitch was appointed Assistant Minister of War, in which office he remained up to the time of the Bolshevik counterrevolution

Iverkiala.—The especially revered knon of Our Lady of Iversis, which is kept in Moscow in a special chappi near one of the gates of the Kremin It was the customary processing of the Tasis, when coming to Moscow, to visit that chaple on their way to the Ealase in order to pray before the ken

Kaledin. — General A Cossack Took an unportant part in this war After the old rights of self government, of which the autocracy deprived the Cossacks, were restored to them by the Provingenal Government, Keledin was elected the first Ataman of the Don Cossacks, to head of the Don Cossacks to head of the oxecutive power in the territories on the River Don inhabited by Cossacks Accord ing to the old Cossack Law, overy

distint in amounted he the "titele. ' a mirt of elected bods with both administrative and libialative for others, which nom innica for a certain period all the citicials, with the Atamen at their hand. On his entering that office, General Kaledin betame a supporter of a wale autonemy of the Cassack territory and acquired a great popularity out next the Consucks At the Moscow Conference (summonest by the Provisional Government In order that the critical situation at the front and in the country might be discussed by representatives of the nation), haledin declared in the name of the whole of Itusuan Cossackilon that the latter favoured a Republican form of government After the Bolshevik counter revolution, Kaledin placed him self at the head of the anti Bulshevik movement on the Don haledin did not underestimate the elimentary force of the anarchist wave which carried off the whole of the soldier messes and was even spreading to the poorer elements of Cossackdom . he therefore acted in a very prudent way, avoiding collision with the Bolsheviks, which he considered then premature | This gave rise to conflicts between Kuledin and the other leaders of the movement In Tebruary 1918 Kaledin committed sweds by shooting himself

Kamenev (Bosenfeld) — A promise ent Social Democrat of the Bolshevik wing Propsgandas and publicate For many years a close collaborator of Lemis During the west he carried out a reconnection with the second collaborator of the second collaborator of the second collaborator with the Russan Labour circles and led the Bolshevik group in the fourth Dums At the beginning of 1915 Kamuot, together with the five Bolshovik members of the Duma, was arrested and trud for defeatist propagands and for participation in the Social Democratio Party. When Living ovidence, Kameney declared that he did not in the hast share Lenin a programme In connection with the war Logother with the Bolsheri deputies, he was deported to Siberia After the amnesty o 1917 he returned to l'etrograd and on Lenm's return to Russia became his zealous collaborator He has always acted in a very prodent and equivocal way After the Bulshovik coup detail he was for a short time one of the People's Commissance, ic Lenm's Ministers, as well as Chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet Honorer, with his customary prudence Kameney goon ohose to accept a diplomatio mission He was appointed abroad "Ambassador" to Visuna, but on his way there fell into the hands of Finnish White Guards and was imprisoned. The first delegation to Brest Litovak in cluded Kameney, but he preferre to avoid participation in the second

Kamkey (Katz),—Social Revolutionary Prosecuted by the Tiss's Government for his revolutionary work, Kamkoy at the very beginning of his activity field abroad and spent there many years as a political relugee Graduated at a German Univereity, then studied in Paris During the war joined the St tream internationalist wing of the property of the Control of the Tourney of the Control of the Control Sutterland a small paper for Russian prisoners in Germany; On his return to Russia after the amnesty, Kamkov became one of the leaders of the extrama internationalist "irreconcilables" of his party That wing of the Social Revolutionary Party was in practice very near to the Bolshoviks, striving as it was for dictatorship of the proletanat and of the labouring peasants, and for transforming the war of nations into a social war of classes. The theoretical differ ences between the Left wing and the Centre of the Second Revolutionary Party soon led to an actual sult Even before the Bolsheviks' coun d stat the Left Social Revolutionaries everywhere supporting the Bol shoviks, alter the victory of Lenin, they openly joined the Bolshovik movement Expolled from the Social Revolutionary Party at the Party Congress in November 1917, Kamkov and his friends declared that they formed a separate "Left Social Revolutionary" Party, and sent their representatives to the Council of People's Commissanes, i e Lenin s administration or operation with the Bolsheviks ceased after the Brest Litorsk peace, since the majority of the Left Social Revolutionary leaders, including Kamkov, did not sea their way to recognize that treaty and to share with the Bolsheviks the shame of it According to latest information (as yet unconfirmed), Kamkov has fallen a victim to the Bolshavik terror for the part he took m the organizing of Count Mirbach a assassination in Moscow

Karaulov.—A Cossack of the Tersk region Graduated at the Petro grad University Was member of the fourth Duma, was proma * nent in local and Cossack public affairs When the night of self government was restored to the Cossacks by the Provisional Government, Karaulov was elected Ataman (Head) of the Tersk Cossackdom Afterthe Boshevik coup d'etat Karaulov was killed in a skirmish with rovolted Caueasian mountainers

Kartashev .- Son of an Ural peasant , an exceedingly gifted religiousphilosophical thinker A deeply smeers believer in Orthodox Christlamity, he strove, under the old regime, for a complete liberation of the Church from the tutelage of the State, because the latter was killing the soul of the Church and had made it a kind of police institution fessor at the Theological Academy of Petrograd, he was dismissed because of his religious democratism Together with the well-known writer Merejkovsky and a few others, who strove for the regeneration of the Church, Kurtashov founded in Petrograd the ' Society of Religious Philo sophy," where he has often spoken in defence of the peasant before the Russian Intelligentsia. and boldly denounced the servinty of the Synodal Church, pointing out the necessity of destroying the autocracy which was runing and debauching the Church and depraying the masses of the people It was because he thursted after the regeneration of the Church that this remark able religious thinker was driven to join the active enemies of the autocratic régime Being a supporter of the separation of the Church from the State for the sake of the complete freedom of the former, Kartashev entered the Provisional Government after the abolition of the office of the High Procurator of the Holy Synod, 1 and became the first Under the old rigums a Government omicial with wide powers to control the Church

Minister of Cults, in July 1917.
In August of that year Kartashov, in the name of the Provisional Government, opened the All-Russian Church Congress in Mescow, the object of which was to establish quite independently a nov and free constitution for the Orthodox Church of Russia At the time of the Boshevier out of the Tothodox Church of Russia At the time of the Boshevier of Church of Standard and imprisoned in Gorteres of SS Poter and Paul

Kishkin.-A member of the medical profession A prominent mem ber of the Liberal opposition Leader of the Moscow Left Cadeta Took part in the muui cipal work of Moscow During the war was one of the founders of the All Russian Union of Zemetyos, and, in spito of Govern ment opposition, readered in estimable services to the Russian army by organizing the sanitary department and supplying the army with clothes and better food. In his struggle against the autogracy Kishkin always strove to unite all the Liberal. Democratio and Socialist parties for the fight against the common enemy During the first days of the Revolution Kishkin s activity in Moscow was very important, in that he united all the revolutionary forces for their common object The old regime was over thrown in Moscow in a perfectly painless and bloodless way Kish kin was then appointed Commis sary of the Provisional Govern ment in Moscow He remained in that office till September 1917. when he was offered, and accepted, the portfolio of Minister of Pub he Assistance Kishkin always enjoyed the full confidence of wide circles of Russian society because of his loyal character and consistent democratic ac tivity During the Bolshevik coup détat he was arrested at a atting of the Cabinet and was impresented in the fortress of SS Peter and Paul Kiellakov.—General, Military engener Was assistant Minister of Ways of Communication. Has been attached to the General Headquartors and was in charge of all matters connected with transport for military purposes. Was strested togsther with General Kormilov.

Klembovsky. — General Was in command of the Northern front during the summer of 1917 After Kornilov's rebellion Klembovsky was reheved of his command, his place being taken by General Teheremisson.

Kokoshkin,-Learned historian, an authority on public law and a publician , belonged to the opposition One of the founders and leaders of the Constitutional Democratic Party (" Cadets "the most important Liberal party in Russia), Kokoshkin was elected to the first Duma. and, when the latter was dis solved he signed the manufesto of Viborg (inviting the nation to refuse to provide recruits and to pay taxes, etc.), for which netion he was condemned to prison and disfranchised Kokoshkin was a permanent member of the Control Committee of the Constitutional Democratic Party At the very beginning of the Revolution Koloshkin, as an authority on the constitutional law, was invited by the Pro visional Government to preside over an Extraordinary Legal Commission attached to that Government Later he presided over the Commission entrusted with working out the Electoral

Law of the Constituent Assembly-In July 1917 Kokashkin was invited by Kerensky (upon reconmendation of the Constitutional Democratic Party) to enter his Coaliticuol Cabinet, In which Kokoshkin received the portfolio of brate Controller, and he remained in that office up to the time of Kornilov's rebellion life was elected to the Constituent Assembly, and in December 1917 came to Petrograd from Moscow, the 11th of that month being the data mow at let primarily fixed by the Provisional Covernment for the opening of the Constituent Assembly There Kokoshkus was arrested by the Bolshovika (while on a visit to the Counters Ponum) and ist presented in the fortress of 55 Peter and Paul With a weak constitution and suffering from tuberculous, liks health rapidly declined there, and his friends succeeded in having him trans ferrod (together with Shingarev) to a private nursing home. There, on the very night of his arrival and on the eve of the opening of the Constituent Assembly, the suffering Kokoshkin was atrociously murdered in his bod by the infurioted Red Guards Such was the tragic end of this man, whose knowledge, linpar trality, and energy were instru mental in creating the most perfect and just Liectoral Law of the Russian Constituent As sembly

Kolokolov. — A civil judge Member (appointed by the Government) of the Commission of Inquiry for the Kornilov Affair

Konovalov.—One of the most im portant Moscow manufacturers, a well known Liberal public worker of Moscow Wes a mem ber of the fourth Dunas where he belonged to the Progressive proup; and, during the last trare, took on active part in the liberation movement As a politician Konutalov always strote to create a single wale front in opposition to the Government, to unite Liberal, Democretic, and Socialist Parties for a joint ottack on the autocracy After the defeat of the Russian armies in 1915 Kunovalov participated in organizing a coup detat which was then belog prepared Konosaley was a member of the first administration of the Provisional Covernment, where he was the Minister of Commerce and Industry in June 1917 Konevalor reserved that office, but an September he resumed it in the last administration of the Provisional Government, where he was also Vice-President of the Council of Ministers During the Bolshovsk coup d'état Konovalov was arrested of the aitting of the Cabinet and remained in presoned for a long time in the fortress of 53 Puter and Paul

Kornilov,-General A Cossack, an officer of the General Staff, and a fighting officer of exceptional When a young officer, prover? Korniles made un extremely dangerous journey in Alghanistan for intelligence purposes During the present war he became famous for his escape from an Austrian presoners' camp His further activity is described in this book According to reliable information, Kornilov was killed during his struggle against the Bolsher iks

Keretker. — Colonel A fighting officer Member of the Executive Committee of the Armes' Group on the Western front At the time of Kornilov's rebellion Keretkev with a detachment of treops marched on the Staska (G H Q)

Hovel.—This toun was captured by the Austre Germans in 1915. The attempts made in 1916 to rotake this important strategie centre were badly organized and therefore unsuccessful, and cost the Russian army terrible sacrifices.

Kovno.—A first class fortress, not far from Vina Has been cap tured by the Germans, together with the whole of its artillery and immense ammunition stores owing to criminal negligence of the High Command The Gover nor of the fortress, who let Kovno at the most critical moment, has been condemned and impnaced with hard labour

Krllenko,-Ensign Participated in the present war An active member of the Bolshevik Party In 1905 Krilenko, then a student of Petrograd University became conspicuous in party propaganda and was widely known as a powerful speaker (under the nicknamo of Comrada Abra ham | Was tried for parts cinsting in the Petrograd Social Democratic organization Later Krilenko gradueted at the Univer sity and was in the Civil Service in the provinces After the Revolution of 1917 Knichko was elected first a member, then Chairman of the Executive Com mittee of the 11th Army on the Galician front, where he earned on an energetic propaganda in favour of Bolshevism and egamst the offensive After the Bolshe vik rising in Petrograd in July 1917 Knlenko was arrested by the military authorities, but was released later by the judicial authorities the evidence against him being deemed insufficient

He was appointed Commander in Chief in the first days of the Balshay IL counter revolution. and, with a detachment of sailors and Red Guards serzed the General Headquarters, where the Cluef of the General Staff, General Duklionin, was atrociously mur dered at the railway station, under the very eyes and without the interference of Krilenko Even before the Brest Litovski peace, Krdenko completely de stroyed the Russian army by his gaominious and treacherous order authorizing each unit at the front to conclude a separate armistice with the enemy, which order was fully exploited by the German Steff At the critical moment of the Brest negotiations. Krilenko, without waiting for definite information about their result, ordered the demobiliza tion of the army, thereby loss sog Russia completely at the mercy of the Central Powers and making the German Staff the unchallonged master of the Bol shevik Government.

Krimov General A fighting offi cer Full particulars in the book

Krokhmal. — Barrister Promi nent member of the Social Demo cratic Party, elected by the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet of Soldiere' and Workmen a Deputies to sit on the Commission of Inquiry for the Kornilov Affair

Kronstadt.—A fortified city on the Gulf of Finland Built by Peter the Great to protect the ap proaches to Petrograd, Kronstadt has lost of late its strategic importance. In the times of Tasardom there were quartered in Kronstadt the disciplinary bat talions of the Balto Fleet, whither the worst characters of all the crows were sent for nunishment and correction There were also a carrison, docks. workshops, oto, In 1900 the Kronstadt carrison remonded to the desclution of the first Dum's by an unsuccessful risms the Revolution broke out in 1317 most revolting acts of violence were committed in Kronstadt on the officers, mostly by the nunished sailors of the disciplinary units The Commander of Kron studt was torn to pieces, many officers were murdered, others were thrown into military prisons and Lept there in conditions oven more cruel than those in which sailors had been kent in the same prison before the Resolution Such was the fury of the sadors' rovenge for the nest, that neither the first Minister of Marino in the Provisional Government, A T. Gutchkov, nor the mubiary judicial authorities could do any thing to botter the lot of these officers The situation was only altered through the intervention of the Cabinet, more especially of Kerensky The sailors allowed a special commission delegated by Korensky to investigate the position of the officers and gradually to release them and to bring them out of Kronstadt The unhealthy past of Kronstadt. the concentration there of vicious elements of the navy, of political police agents and German spies in great numbers—all this made Kronstadt an especially easy prey for the corrupting Belshevik propaganda

Kumin.—Captain in the Russian army Gradusted as an engineer Took part in the Japanese War During the revolutionary move ment of 1903 Kurmin placed himself at the head of the revolted garrison of Krasmolarek (Suberra) and of the revolutionary municipal authorities Ho was sentenced to death im his abenect by the nunitive expedition of General Bannenkampf. fled from Russan territory and lived first in Paris, then on Mount Athos Later he voluntanky returned to Russia, surrendered to the authorities, and was sentenced by court martiel to a long impresonment with hard labour. On his return to Petrograd after the Revolution Kurnun was appointed, in May 1017. Deputy-Commander of the troops of the Petrograd Military District Owing to his revolutionary record, Kuzmin enjoyed a great moral authority among the soldiery and successfully fought against Bolshovik tendencies In the arms

Lobedev .-- A Social Revolutionary under the old reams Organized and participated in the revolutionary movement amongst the troops Prosecuted because of this activity, Lobedev was compelled to take refuse abroad and fixed for a long time in France After the declaration of war Lebedev fought in the ranks of the I'rench urms, and returned to Russia when an amnosty was granted in Russia to officers of the French army who won military distinctions After Gutchkov's withdrawal from the Ministry of Manne, the new Minister of Marine (Kerensky) appointed him Chairman of the Commission for the purpose of revising the Statute of the Navy. In that capacity he resisted with considerable success the excessive demands of the sailors, a task which proved to be too much for the previous Chairman of that Commission, the Right Octobrist Savitch Later entrusted with the administration of the Ministry of Marine, Lebudes carried on an enzy-file struggle against the flobhlouk defentate propagated amongst the saifors, and was nearly always busy in visiting for that purpose the ships of the Baltio navy An enthusistic patrol and a warm supporter of the national defence, Lebude, has been compolied, ance the Balabeuk ravolution, for rimain in hiding as he is being sought for by undisciplined bands of Bolshevik sailors

Letchitsky—A fighting general of old traditions After the Revolution it became impossible for him to serve in the army under the new conditions

Liber.-A prominent Social Demo crat (Monshovik) At the time of the Provisional Government Laber was one of the most active members of the Presidency of the Central Executive Committee of the Source of Soldiers' and Workmen's Deputies, Member felected hv the Contral Executive Committee of the boviet of Soldiers' and Work mee a Deputies) of the Com mission of Inquiry for the Kormloy Affair

Luga.—A provincial town half way between Pakov and Petrograd, on the Waraaw railway

Lukomsky.—General An officer of the General Staff, professor as brillant multiary career and, when still a comparatively young man, was appointed Deputy Minister to the Minister for War, General Polivanov When the place of the latter was taken by General Sukhominov, Jaskensky went into does not fought with in a stream in a number of battles, having especially distinguished bimost during most difficult operations in the Carpathasis lits double experience as an administrator and as a nighting general made him particularly suitable for one of the posts in the army, and in My 1917 Lukomsky, was appented Chief of the Staff of the General issime Brussilov, in which office he remained up to his arrest in connection with Kormlov's rebellion

LTOY .- Prince G. A well known Zemetto worker. Was a member of the first Duma. A veteran of the Laberal Constitutional move ment of the Zematsos roember of the famous delegation of Zemstvos and towns in 1905 which presented Tear Nicholas II with an address pointing out the necessity of establishing a consti tutional government A remark able organizer, Lvov created at the beginning of the war the All Russian Union of Towns, and rondered mestimable services to the Russian army by creating en exemplary system of sanitary institutions and by supplying the army with food, clothes, and even with ammunition All the best elements of the Zemstvo3 rallied around Liov, and the Union of which he was the leader has played an exceedingly impor tant part in uniting during the war the enemies of Taardom for the fight against the latter When the old regime was over thrown, Prince Lyoy proved to be the only one whose candidature to the premiership was unopposed, as both Liberal and Democratio circles recognized how greatly he had deserved of the State, and held him personally in great-esteem After the Bolshevilrising in July 1917 Lvov left the Provisional Government, in which he held office both as Prime Minister and Minister of the Interior

Lvov, V. N.-A big landowner Was a member of the third and fourtly Dumes Belonged to the parties of the Right fourth Duna member of the so called Centre, a small group consisting mainly Conscrvativo landowners and occupying a middle post tion between the Octobrists and the Nationalists during the war, a new Conserva tive Liberal majority was formed in the Duma, under the name of "Progressive Coalition," the group of the Contre formed its right wing Lyov represented that group in the first Provisional Government, where, having been considered in the Duma a special est on Church questions, he was given the pertfolio of the High Procurator of the Holy Synod of the Orthodox Church In July 1917 Lvov left the Previ sional Confirment and the office of High Procurator was discontinuod, as being contrary to the principle of the autonomy of the Orthodox Church and hateful to the Church because of its his torical traditions

Maklakov,-A Moscow barrister, powerful political and courts epeaker, one of the foremost Laberal politicians In 1994. when certain political crimes were taken out of the jurisdiction of the administrative authorities to be trad by special courts, and thus the so called "political cuses" were resumed in Russia, Maklakov with a few of his colleagues organized the Moscow Group of Counsel for the defence of political criminals Maklakov was a member of the Cadet Party. where he occupied a position on the right wing Was a member of the second, third, and fourth Dumas During the war Makla-kow was in a jimpathy with the coup d'élat which was then being prepared. In the first days of the Revolution, before a Provisional Government was formed, the Duma Licecture Committee appointed Maklakov Commissary of the Numitry of Justice In the summer of 1017 Maklakov was appointed Ambassador of the Provisional Government to France

Marker.—General One of the younger generals belonging to the Genoral Staff, a close collaborator and advisor of Genoral Demkin and a permanent Chief of Staff of the latter. His attutude towards the elected mistary organizations contributed much towards straining the relations botween these bodies and General Demkin. Markov helped to prepare the Kornilov movement at the South western front.

Martov (Zederbaum) .- One of the oldest Social Domocratic leaders in Russia, publicist For many years collaborated in the leading party organs, under the old regimo lived mostly abroad as a political refugee After the split of the Russian Social Demo cratic Party into Bolsheviks (under Lenin) and Monsheviks, Martov assumed the leadership of the latter During the war Martov neither shared the anti-Marvian and extremist attitude of Lenin towards the war, nor did ho join the supporters of the national defence ( 'Oborontzy "). he was the most important representative of the so called "internationalist " point of view, which may be described as a sort of melevolent neutrality towards the war On his return to Russia after the Royclution, Marton, together with a small group of his friends, adopted in his princips an attitude of bestulity towards the Provisional Government and the national democratic movement of the "oborontzy" During that first mered of the Russian Revolution, Martey, while keeping in practice aloof from Lenin's enterprises, lent to Bolshevism his theoretical and moral support, mostly by his contributions to the Norara Jun. edited by the famous Russian writer, Maxim Gorky After the Bolshevik coun d'état Martov became a bitter opponent of Lenin, Trotsky and Co , whom he proclaimed the greatest and most dangerous enemies of the proleterist and of the whole of democracy

Millukov .- Learned Justorian , lete lecturer at the Moscow Univer sity, author of the well known works "The Russian State under Peter the Great," "Essays on the Russian Culture,' and others One of the founders and the leader of the Constitutional Da mocratic Party Member of the third and fourth Dumas Has taken a prominent part the liberation movement which has been going on in Russia for the last twenty years Activoly participated in the March Revolution (of 1917). first as a member of the P xecutive Committee elected by the Dume. to direct the events, then as the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the first Provisional Government After having been in office for nearly two months, Miliukov, who supported an aggressive policy in the question of war sims, dis agroed with the views held by the majority of the members of the Provisional Government upon the immediate object of the Russian foreign policy, and at the beginning of May 1917 he resigned office. Since then Mhukov has been in opposition to the Government

Mironov Sanskrit scholar and a Social Revolutionary journalist Took part in the liberation movement of 1905-6 long in Paris as a political referee On his return to Russia culful mated in the Academy of Sciences In the spring of 1917, after the Revolution, Mironov placed himself at the disposal of the Ministry of War for work of counter esmonage He was the head of the counter espionage department of the Staff of the Petrograd Military District, and apecialized in the matter of German influences in the Belshavik Party

Mitava (=Mitav).—The capital of Courland Captured by the Germans et the beginning of the war In the winter of 1916 a Russian offensive took place in the direction of Mitava, which was badly organized and un autocascial.

Mohillex.—Administrative centre of the Province (Government) of Mohilov. Was the residence of the General Headquarters from the summer of 1915 up to the Bohlevik counter revolution It was the scene of the nurder of General Dukkomm. At present Mohilev is in the hands of the

Mojalsk.—A provincial town, not far from Moscow

Muravlav, Captain.—Naval officer Participated in the present war Muraviov was a fisg captain attached to the Minister of Manne, Kerensky,

Nabokov, Y. D .- Son of a Minister of Justice under Alexander the Second, a buy landowner. specialist on penal law Was a lecturer upon penal law in the ' Privileged School of Law' until the time of the liberation movement of 1905 6, in which movement he participated as a publicist and a pronunent mem ber of the Constitutional Demo cratic Party Nabokov was a member of the first Duma and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment and deprived of political rights for having signed the Viborg Manifesto (which invited the nation to refuse levice and monoys to the Govern ment on account of the dissolu tion of the Duma) Previously Nabokov had been deprived of his rank at Court for having published articles against the Government, more especially one protesting against the Jewish pogrom at Kishinev (1903) After the Revolution Nabokov was appointed Director of Affairs to the Provisional Government, member of a special Legal Commission attached to the Government, and to report on Caucasian affairs I ater he was appointed member of the Sinate

Nekrassov .- Graduate of Institute of Ways and Communications Member for Tomsk (Siberia) in the third and fourth Dumas. where he was prominent as the leader of the Loft wang of the Cadets, in opposition to the Right wing under the leadership of Miliukov His political work began when he was elected to the Dums, in whose assembly Nekrassov soon took his place amongst the foremost and most active members of the opposition and worked hard in trying to effect a coalition of different groups of the opposition (Liberals. Democrate, and Socialists), which condition Nicknessov (together with his political (riends) considered most essential as a preparatory step towards the struggle for wresting the power from the old refume When war was declared Nekrassov temporarily abandoned politics and wont to the front as the Chairman of the "Union of Towns," for the purpose of organizing at the front hospitals, supply contress, baths, out

After the terrible defeats of 1915, whon the criminal activity of the Court Camanilla (Rasputin and others) became even more opporent, Nekrassov resumed his political life and took an active part in the work of the organiza tions which were preparing the coup detat The spontaneous outburst of the suffering masses in March 1917 put an end to the work, and, instead of an organ uzed coup detat, resulted un a people s revolution, which for a while made of the Dums a national revolutionary centre The Government created by that centre naturally included Nekras sov, who became Minister of and Communications During the first four months of the Revolution Nekrassov (with a few others) also represented in the Government the Cadet Party At the beginning of July Nekras sov went to Kiov as a member of the Government delegation for the settlement of the Ukrainian question As his stems upon this matter proved irreconcilable with those of other Cadet mem bers of the Government, Nekras soy left both his party and the Government, but shortly after wards re entered the Cabinet as a pon party politicien. He re cerved the portfolio of Minister of Finance, and was also appointed Vice President of the Council of Ministers After the Kornilov rebellion Nokrassov went to Fm - Polivanov.—General land as Governor General, where he was still at the time of the Bolshoui, revolt third Dunna) Assu

Novossiltsey.-A big landowner A Zemsti a norker and a politician Cadet (Constitutional Democrat) of the Right Was a member of the fourth Duma, but roughed his seat a considerable time before the expiration of his mandate Upon the declaration of the war Novossiltage was called to the colours as a reserve officer First he was at the front, then was transferred to General Hond quarters, where he took an am portant part in organizing the All Russian Officere Longue Was Chairman of the Main Committee of that League After the Kor mlov rabellion was arrested by the Government

Oldenburg.-Member and Perma nent Secretary of the Academy of Sciences of Petrograd an author ity on Sanskrit and Buddhism Member of the Central Com mittee of the Constitutional Democretio Party (Cadeta) Although a brilliant scholar he has never kept hunself within the sphere of purely academic in terests, even from an early age he took an active part in the liberation movement and has done all he could to promote the edu cation of the Russian people In July 1917 Oldenburg was invited to join the Provisional Govern ment as Minister of Education

Omak.—Seat of administration of the Steppes region of Western Siberia

Oranienbaum.—A small town on the coast of the Gulf of Finland opposite the Isle of Kothin, where Kronstadt is situated An im perial residence

Very ablo General Staff officer Was for some time (in the dojs of the third Duna) Assistant Minister for Har Belonged to the off cers' circles which rallied to Guichkov. and, together with the latter, carried on a struggle egainst Sukhomlines and liss camarilla After the débacle of the Russian armies in 1915 and the fall of bukhomhnov, Poli tanov was appointed Minister for War, he tried to meet Russian society half way in its offorts, resisted by the majority of the Government, to come to Pobs anov the aid of the army also tried to organize collabora tion with the Duma In short. his policy was to a certain extent a Progressive one He did not remain long Minister of War, because of his differences on many points with the ever grow ing reaction of Government circles After the Resolution GutchLov .. then Minister of War, appointed Polivanov Chairman of the Latra ordinary Commission newly estab babed by the Ministry of War for the purpose of revising the Military Code with a view to bringing it into agreement with the new revolutionary conditions of his in the army This Com mission which was known as Pohyondy a Commission is well remembered for its dis satrous results, was composed partly of military officials ap pointed by the Ministry, partly of elected delegates of soldiers organizations and representatives of the Petrograd Workmen e and Soldiera Soviet Under the in fluence of the general atmosphere in the first period of revolu tionary excitement, the Com mission imprudently went much too far in meeting the wishes and demands of the soldiers and the Soviet's representatives, who wanted radically to modify the whole army discipline and the relations between the body of officers and the rank and file When in May Kerensky became Minister of War, he stopped the work of this Commission and started gradually to wind up the awkward legacy of its reformatory activities

Pronin.—Colonel Officer of the General Staff In 1917 sorted on the Staff of the Commander in Chief Was Vice Chairman of the Main Committee of the All Russian Officer's Legue (for particulars of which eee book)

Protopopov. - The last Tsanst Minister of the Interior, big landowner of the Government of Simbirsk and an important manu facturer, supplying cloth to the army In 1916 was elected Marshal of the Nobility of his province A retired officer Was a member of the third Dume and Deputy Speaker of the fourth Duma Protopopov belonged to the Octobrist Party and displayed always rather Progressive tenden cies He tried to be on good terms with the moderate and even the extreme opposition groups of the Duma, at the same time conserving very friendly relations with the bureaucratio circles When the Special Commussion was formed for the purpose of inquiring into the enminal conduct of Sukhom lingy, the Minister for War. Proto popov became the representative of the Duma on it, both hy election and by appointment of the Government During the war Protopopov became intimater with the Rasputin circles and came under the patronage of Rasputin In September 1918 Protopopov was appointed Min tster of the Interior, being de agnated for that post hy the Rasputin circles and insistently supported by the Tsarina Once Minister of the Interior, at the very time when the whole of Russian society, the Duma, and even his own party were carrying on a bitter fight against the crumbling Teardom, Protopopov soon forgot his "Liberalism" and became a domlo tool in the hands of the Court Camarilla He rapidly became one of the best hated men in Russia After the assassination of Rasputin, Protonopov tried to keep his position by assuring the Tearing and ber intimates that Rasputin was in mystical communication with him, and even that Raspu tin's spirit had incarnated in him When the Revolution broke out, Protopopov, who only with difficulty escaped lynching, ap peared before the Dums and voluntarily surrendered to the revolutionary authorities topopov was recently shot by the Bolsheviks

Pugatabey Movement (Pugatcheyetchina).- Towards the end of the eighteenth century, during the reign of Catherine the Great, an exceptionally powerful spon taneous rising of the peasant serfs broke out in the Urale and in the Volga provinces Taking reverge on their age long op pressors -- the landlords -- the peasant masses everywhere mas eacred their masters and burnt down the estates and plundered the property of the nobles At the head of the mutineers was an ignorant Cossack, Emelian Pugatchev, who declared himself to be the Emperor Peter III (the husband of Catherine the Great. who was dethroned by her and later strangled by one of her lovers) Violent anarchical mass movements are often called in rebellion Nekrassov went to Finland as Governor General, where he was still at the time of the Bolshowk revolt

Hovessiltsey .- A big landowner A Zemstyo worker and a politician Cadet (Constitutional Democrat) of the Right Was a member of the fourth Duma, but resigned his seat a considerable time before the expiration of his mandate Upon the declaration of the war Novosaltsov was called to the colours as a reserve officer First he was at the front, thon was transferred to General Head quarters, whore he took an am portant part in organizing the All Russian Officers' League Was Chairman of the Main Committee of that Loague After the Korpilov rebellion was arrested by the Government

Oldenburg.-Member and Permanent Secretary of the Academy of Sciences of Petrograd, an authority on Sanskrit and Buddhism Member of the Central Com mittee of the Constitutional Democratic Party (Cadata) Although a brilliant scholar, he has never kept himself within the sphere of purely academic in terests, even from an early age he took an active part in the liberation movement and has done all be could to promote the edu cation of the Russian people In July 1917 Oldenburg was mysted to join the Provisional Govern ment as Minister of Education

Omak.—Seet of administration of the Steppes region of Western Siberia

Oranienbaum.—A small town on the coast of the Gulf of Finland, opposite the Isle of Kotlin, where Kronstadt is stuated An imperial residence

Vory able General Staff officer Was for some time (in the days of the third Duma) Assistant Minister for War Belonged to the officers' circles which rellied to Gutchkov. and, together with the latter, carried on a struggle against Sukhomlinos and his camarilla After the debacle of the Russian ormies in 1915 and the fall of Sukhomhnov, Poh vanov was appointed Minister for War, he tried to meet Russian society half way in its efforts, resisted by the majority of the Government, to come to the aid of the army Pohranov also tried to organize collaboration with the Duma In short, his policy was to a certain extent a Progressive one He did not remain long Minister of War. because of lus differences on many points with the ever growangreaction of Government circles. After the Rovolution Gutchkov, then Minister of War, appointed Polivanov Chairman of the Extra ordinary Commission newly estab hehed by the Ministry of War for the purpose of revising the Military Code with a view to bringing it into agreement with the new revolutionary conditions of life in the army This Com mission, which was known as "Polivanov's Commission" and is well remembered for its dis actrous results, was composed partly of mulitary officials ap pointed by the Ministry, partly of elected delegates of soldiers organizations and representatives of the Petrograd Workmen s and Soldiers Soviet Under the in fluence of the general atmosphere in the first period of revolu tionery excitement, the Commission imprudently went much too far in meeting the wishes and demands of the soldiers and the Soviet's representatives, who wanted radically to modify the whole army discipline and the relations between the body of officers and the rank and file When in May Kerensky became Minister of War, he stopped the work of this Commission and started gradually to wind up the awkward legacy of its reformatory activities

Pronin.—Colonel Officer of the General Staff in 1917 served on the Staff of the Commander in Chief Was Vice Chairman of the Main Committee of the All Russian Officers' Legue (for particulars of which see book)

Protopopov. - The last Tsarist Minister of the Interior, hig landowner of the Government of Simhirsk and an important manu facturar, supplying cloth to the army In 1916 was elected Marshal of the Nobility of his province A retired officer Was a mumber of the third Duma and Deputy Speaker of the fourth Dums Protopopov belonged to the Octobrist Party and displayed always rather Progressive tenden He tried to be on good terms with the moderate and even the extreme opposition groups of the Duma, at the same time conserving very friendly relations with the bureaucratic circles When the Special Commission was formed for the purpose of inquiring into the criminal conduct of Sukhom linov, the Minister for War, Proto popov became the representative of the Duma on it, both by election and by appointment of the Government During the war Protopopov became intimate with the Rasputin circles and came under the patronago of Resputin In September 1916 Protopopov was appointed Min ister of the Interior, being de signated for that post by the Resputin circles and insistently supported by the Tearing Once Minister of the Interior, at the very time when the whole of Russian society, the Duma, and even his own party were carrying on a bitter fight against the crumbing Tsardom, Protopopov soon forgot his 'Liberalism' and became a docile tool in the hands of the Court Camarilla He rapidly became one of the hest hated men in Russia the assassination of Rasputin, Protopopov tried to keep his position by assuming the Tsarina and her intimates that Rasputin was in mystical communication with bim, and even that Raspu tins spirit had incarnated in him When the Revolution broke out, Protopopov, who only with difficulty escaped lynching, ap peared hefore the Duma and voluntarily surrendered to the revolutionary authorities Pro topopov was recently shot by the Bolshavska

Pugatchev Movement (Pugatchevatchina).-Towards the end of the eighteenth century, during the reign of Catherine the Great, an exceptionally powerful apon teneous rising of the peasant seris broke out in the Urals and in the Velga provinces Taking revenge on their age long on pressore - the landlords - the peasant masses everywhere massacred their masters and burnt down the estates and plundered the property of the nobles At the head of the mutineers was an ignorant Cossack, Emelian Pugatchev, who declared himself to be the Emperor Peter III (the husband of Catherns the Great, who was dethroned by her and later strangled by one of her lovers) Violent anarchical mass movements are often called in

Russia" Pogatches atchina "after this feader of the peasants rising

Purishkavitch.-A mulitant read tlonars In Pichyo's tume was in the Civil Services in the capacity of official for special missions Publicist In 1005 he helped to organize the "Black Ifun ireda" A violent anti Participated in the Semite "League of United Nobility " and the ' Union of the Russian Prople" Later created the rivat reactionary "League of Arch angel Michael, 'aubsidized by the Government PurishLovitch spo cialized in systematic attacks on the Universities and on public mon prominent in popular edu cation Was a member of the second, third, and fourth Dumas, where he became notorious for his unbearable and scandalous behaviour For some time Pu rishkovitch enjoyed exceptional patronage in the highest govern montal circles, when he and his Losgue and its provincial bran ches played the part of a volun tary police organization, hterally terrorizing the people by their espionage and denunciations Pu rishkovitch carried on a violent campaign against all non Russian nationalities and cults within the Luppre In the fourth Dums. upon the declaration of the war. Purishkevitch stopped his destructive and anti-public work and displayed considerable energy in his activity with the Red Cross Under pressure of the horrors of the Rasputin regime. Purishkevitch, although a mon archist, began to act as an on ponent of the régime, and finally participated in the assessmanian of Gregory Rasputin Raupakh. — A colonel Military lawyer, member (appointed by the Government) of the Commission of Inquiry for the Kornilot Affair.

Redslanko.-A big landowner Has been many times elected 'Marshal of the Notility " of the previnces uhero his estates nem situated During the liberation measurent ol 1905 he joined the mactionary forces of bure sucracy and nobility. At the time of the first Dunes he was elected by the nobility Council (tho the State Upper House) Was a member of the 'Umon of the Nobles" which demanded and obtained the dissolution of the first Dums and directed the reactionary policy of Stolipin During the period of reaction which set in after the dissolution of the first Duma, Bodzianko was the leader of his Government (province) in the campaign of the reactionary nobility against the Zemstics and against all the acquisitions gained through the hberation? movement of 1003 After the reforms of the electoral law of the Duma sliegally enforced by Stobpin, when a reactionary majority was artificially ereated by means of a curtal system of elections, Rodeianko was sent to the third Duma by the landowner curs of the Government of Ekatermoslav (Ukraina) There he joined the Octobrist Party led by Gutchkov That party formed, together with the Nation shat group, the majority in the third Duma The Russian people remember well the activity of that majority, tending to destroy all the cultural and constitu tional gains of 1905-6, the persecutions of the non Russian nationalities of the Empire (Finns, Poles, Jews, etc.), and finally, its Land Act, contrary to the interests of the immense majority of the Russian peasantry Dur ing the last years of that Dums,

Rodzianko was elected Speaker. Ho was re elected to the fourth Duma, of which he also was the Speaker during all the five years of its oxistence, and, together with the majority of that Duma, Rodzianko performed a rapid evolution towards the Left. The régune of Resputin drove even the most devoted supporters of the Tsardom into the opposite camp The criminal anti patri otic activity of the Court Cams rilla during the ner not only allayed the fear of revolution in the mind of people like Rodzian ho, but actually convinced them that the Revolution was possible. nav. mevitable During the winter of 1916 Rodzianko had even something to do with the preparatory organizing of a coup detai And so the Revolution did not take by surprise this former reactionary, after a short hesitation Rodzianko, on the afternoon of February 27th. 1917, definitely joined the move ment, accepted the chairmanship of the Executive Committee of the Duna, and sent to the Tear Nicholas the famous telegram in which he urgod him to abdicate Rodzianko was also a member of the delegation to the Grant Duke Micheel which presented the latter with a similar demand Having been left out of the Cebinet of the Provisional Government, Rodzianko remained after the Revolution, Speaker of the Duma As the importance and the authority of the Duma were rapidly diminishing, Rodzianko went even more into the shade and since then has not taken any positive part in events After July 1917 Rodzianko openly went over to the on position to the Provisional Go vernment anl again passed through a rapid evolution—this time from Left to Right The political story of Rodmanko is interesting because he may be considered a typical representative of his class

Romanovsky.—General, Officer of the General Staff In 1917 was Quartermaster General at the Staff of the Commander in Chief Romanovsky was arrested with General Kornilov

Ruzsky.—Gonerel Took a promuent part in the war, at the beginning of which he participated in the first offensive in Galicia, afterwards he was in command of the Northern army For some time Ruzsky has been very popular in wide circles of Russian society

Samarin,—General Officer of the General Steff and a fighting officer Took part in the present war For a time was Guef of Staff of General Krimov Under Keronsky as Minister of War, Samarin held the office of Wasantant Chief of the Military Cabinet of the Minister, later he was appointed to command the troops of the Liutske Military Dastret in Siberia

San. A river in Eastern Galicia. There the German army under General Mackeusen effected the famous break through of 1915, when Russian troops, lacking ammunition, almost entirely without artillery (owing to the criminal policy of the Minister of War, Sukhomhnov, and others), were subjected to a sweeping drum fire and were compelled to a hurried retreat from Galicia Shortly upon this retreat followed the fall of Warsaw, the retaking by the Austrians of the first class fortress of Peremyshl (Przemysl), taken by the Russians at the cost of enormous sacrifices, and so on

"Savade" Division,-Ille Cauca sian cavalry division formed by the Tears brother, the Grand Duke Michael, of representatives of Moslem Canenanan tribes which were exempt from conscription This division consisted of ox cordingly brave but utterly un custized mountaineers and was commanded by officers selected hy the Grand Dake Among these officers there were many Quarits and young men belonging to anatogratic families division was considered oute "free from infection of revolu tionary propagands, and there fore particularly autable for carrying out the plan of the plotters The division distin guished itself in the war by the exceptional boldness of its cavalry charges on the enemy and by its rather easy ways with the peaceful population

Savinkov.-One of the foremost revolutionances member of the Social Revolutionary Party A partisan of terrorism, Sovinkov organized and co operated in the most important political assas sinations in Russia (Plebve Grand Duko Sergus and others) Spent many years abroad as a political refugee, and hes written during that period several novels from the life of revolutionances which enjoyed a great success On his return to Russis after the Revolution Salvingov went to the Gahcian front as the Commissary of the 7th Army to which post he was appointed by the Minister of War Kerensky upon a recommendation of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet There Savinkov car ried on an intense struggle against the Bolshevik tendencies, and at the peril of his life restored discipline in some of the most debauched regiments. By that activity Savinkov considerably contributed to the success of the offensive on the lat of July 1917.

at Brazany
When herensky became ac
quanted on the spot with Savin kos s work, he appeanted him
First Commissary of the Minister of War attached to the Commander of the Army group of the South western Iront, threeby eresting a now office with very vide powers. Savinkos activity since that appointment is de serbed in the book little.

Savitch.—Momber of the third and fourth Durnes Octobrist One of the close collaborators of Gutchkov In the Durne he was considered a specialist on matters connected util, the navy Was for some time Chairman of the Army and Navy Commission of the Durne After the Ravviduon the Minnetr of Wer and Manne (Gutchkov) formed a the Ninnstry a Commission smaller than Ninnstry a Commission smaller was the control of War and opposited Warnetry of War and opposited Savitch to act as its Chairman

Scilvanov.—General A fighting general During the July offen aive was in command of an army corps, then was in command of an army at the Galician front

Shablovsky.—Military Naval Proseeutor (Procureur) General, Chair man of the Extraordinary Commission of Inquiry for the Kornilov Affair Under Tear dom Shablovsky was a prominent barnster who special tood in the defence (mostly in the Ballic provinces) of persons prosecuted by the Tana & Government on account of their revolutonary and political activity

Shingarev.- Member of the medical profession Was prominent in the Zometros both as medical man and as Zemstve Councillor Publicist After having graduated at the University, Shingarev gave up his University career and settled in the country in order to treat peasants Slun garey took part for many years in the Zemstvo and liberation mos emont He was a member of the second, third and fourth Dumas Was a member of the Cadet Party, vice chairman of its Duma group and a member of the Central Committee of the party In the third Duma he specialized in questions of finance In the fourth Duma he also worked much in the Army and Navy Commission, and later bo came its chairman. Ho was a popular speaker in the Duma After the Revelution Shingarev became Minister of Agnoulture. and then Minister of Finance He left the Government at the beginning of July, tegether with other representatives of his party, because of their differences with the Government on the Ukrainian question Under Shingarev as Minister of Acriculture were laid the foundations of the radical agracian reforms Having been closted to the Constituent Assembly in November 1917, Shingarev camo to Petrograd in time for the date fixed by the Provisional Government for the convocation of the Assemblythe 28th of November On the eve of that day Shingarev, to gether with Kokoshkin (qu). was arrested by the Bolsheviks and imprisoned in the fortress of SS Peter and Paul Trans ferred to a private nursing home on the day before the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly, the suffering Shin garey was atrociously mur

dored in bed by the Belshevik guards

Skebeley.-Descendant of schismatic peasants (Melekuni) who were in nast time deported to the Caucasus Son of an important Baku trader Was educated at the Vienna Politechnical In-A Social Demecrat (Menshavik), Skobelov when still a young roan was elected to the fourth Duma by the Russian Transcaucasia population of Joining the Social Democratio group in the Duma, Skobelev by his frequent speeches and questiens on important occasions came to the fereground and acquired a wide reputation Skeheley did not remain within the bounds of party activity, and participated in the general opposition and revolutionary movement not being afraid of co operating with the bourgeeisie Skobolev took a most intimate part in the Revolution from the first day, and when the Petrograd Soviet of Workmen and Soldiers' Delegates had been formed, he was elected its Vice Chairmon In the Soviet Skebelev always onorgatically supported the neces sity of national defence and of a co operation of the Revolu tionary democracy with the Laberal bourgeoisie, if the country and the Revolution were to be saved In the month of May Skobelev became a member of the first coalitional Provisional Government as the head of the then created Manistry of Labour, an which office he remained up to the tune of Kornilov a rebellion

Soldau.—A town in Last Prussia, near which was routed the Russian detachment under Gen oral Samsonov, whereupon Rus sain troops began a disorderly retreat in the autumn of 1914

at the cost of enormous sacrifices, and so on

"Savage" Division .- The Cauca sian cavalry division formed by the Tsar a brother, the Grand Duke Michael, of representatives of Moslem Caucasian tribes which were exempt from conscription This division consisted of ex ceedingly brave but utterly un civilized mountaineers and was commanded by officers selected by the Grand Duke Among these officers there were many Guards and young men belonging to anatocratic families division was considered quite ' free from infection of revolu tionary propaganda and there fore particularly suitable for carrying out the plan of the plotters The division distin guished itself in the war by the exceptions boldness of its cavalry oharges on the enemy and by its rather easy ways with the peaceful population

Sarinkov.-One of the foremost revolutionanes member of the Social Revolutionary Party partisan of terrorism Savinkov organized and co operated in the most important political assas sinations in Russia (Plehve Grand Duke Sergius and others) Spent many years abroad as a nolitical refugee, and has written during that period several novels from the life of revolutionance which enjoyed a great auccess On his return to Russia after the Revolution Savinkov went to the Galician front as the Commissary of the 7th Army to which post he was appointed by the Minister of War Kerensky upon a recommendation of the Central Executive Commuttee of the Soviet There Savinkov car ried on an interne struggle against the Bulshevik ten lencies, and at the peril of his life restored discipline in some of the most debauched regiments. By that activity Savinkov considerably contributed to the success of the offensive on the lat of July 1917 at Brzezany.

When Kerensky became ac quanted on the spot with Savin kov s work, he appointed him First Commissary of the Minister of War stached to the Commander of the Army group of the South western front, thereby creating a new offica with crywide powers Savinkov a catvity since that appointment is described in the book itself.

Savitch.—Member of the third and fourth Dumas Octobrist One of the cless collaborators of Gutchkov In the Duma he was considered a specialist on matters connected with the navy Was for some time Chairman of the Army and Navy Commission of the Duma After the Revolution the Minister of War and Marine (Gutchkov) formed at his Ministry a Commission similar to that of Polvanov (q v) at the Ministry of War, and appointed Savitch to set as its Chairman

Selivanov.—General A fighting general During the July offen sive was in command of an army corps, then was in command of an army at the Galician front

Shablovsky.—Miktary Asa all rose cutor (Procureur) Ceneral, Chair man of the Extraordinary Com mission of Ingury for the Kormon of Ingury for the Kormon and Company for the company of the Company company of the Company of the company of the Company of the the Company of the C Shingarey .-- Momber of the medical profession Was prominent in the Zemstvos both as medical man and as Zemstvo Councillor Publiciet After having graduated at the University, Shingarov gave up his University career and settled in the country in order to treat peasants Shin. garov took part for many years in the Zemstve and liberation mosement He was a member of the second, third and fourth Dumas Was a member of the Cadet Party, vice chairman of its Duma group and a momber of the Central Committee of the party In the third Duma he specialized in questions of finance In the fourth Duma he also worked much in the Army and Navy Commission, and later be came its chairman He was a popular speaker in the Duma After the Revolution Shugarev became Minister of Agriculture, and then Minister of Finance Ho left the Government at the beguning of July, together with other representatives of his party, because of their differences with the Government on the Ukrainian question Under Shingarev as Minister of Agriculturo wero laid the foundations of the radical agrarian reforms Having been elected to the Constituent Assembly in November 1917. Shingarev came to Petrograd in time for the date fixed by the Provisional Government for the convolution of the Assemblythe 28th of November On the eve of that day Shingarev, to gether with Kokoshkin (qu), was arrested by the Bolsheviks and imprisoned in the fortress of SS Peter and Paul Frans ferred to a private nursing home on the day before the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly, the suffering Shin garov was atrociously mur dered in bod by the Bolshevik guards

Skobelov .- Descendant of schismatio peasants (Molokani) who were in past time denorted to the Caucasus Son of an important Haker trader Was colucated at the Vienna Politechnical In-A Social Democrat (Monshovik), Skobelov when still a young man was elected to the fourth Duma by the Russian nonulation of Transcaucesia Joining the Social Democratio group in the Duma, bkobeley by his frequent speeches and questions on important occasions came to the foreground and acquired a wide reputation Skebeley did not remain within the bounds of party activity, and participated in the general opposition and revolutionary " movement, not being afraid of co operating with the bourgeoisie Skobolev took a most intimate part in the Revolution from the first day, and when the Potrograd Soviet of Workmen and Soldiers' Delogates had been formed, ho was olected ats Vice Chairman In the Soviet Skobelov always onergotically supported the neces sity of national defence and of a co operation of the Revolutionary democracy with the Liberal bourgeoisie, if the country and the Revolution were to be saved In the month of May Skobelov became a member of the first continued Provisional Government as the head of the then created Ministry of Labour, in which office he remained up to the time of Kornilov's rebellion

Saldau.—A town in Dast Prussia, near which was routed the Russian detachment under Goneral Samsonov, whereupon Rusaeu troops began a disorderly retreat in the autumn of 1914

Etcheglovitov ... A prominent re-" * actionary politician of the lest sears of Tsardom Alawser and a well known specialist on monal law Steheslovitov up to 1906 sluave combasized his bleral ideas and independence of the governmental influences. When (in the late 'ninetics and first years of 1900) Steherloyltov was Bult Prosecutor (Ober Procuror) of the Criminal Court of I reer Caration) of the Sounte, he even conted the alckname of the " Red Procureur." because of his bold actions in defence of the law courts and courts statutes Dar ing that period Steheglevitor was a contributor (together with most of the prominent surests la opposition to the Government) to the judicial review The Law. which carried on an energotic struggle ogainst the autocracy

Alter Stelleglovitov hod been oppointed Monter of Justice, in the time of the first Duma and before the dissolution of the latter, he strove to keep friendly relotions with its Constitutional Democrotic mojority The dissolution of the Duma and the decisive victory of the Stohpin reaction at a stroke transformed the "Red Procursur" into one of the blackest heroes of the last ten years of Tsardom Stehe glovitov literally "burnt all that he used to adore, and adored all that he used to burn " Lake all renegades, Stcheglovitov tred to make people forget his old sins . thus, he knew no bounds in his jeering mockenes at justice and humanity Being one of the few clever manaters educated in " statesmanship among the many ignorant high dignitaries of the last period of the old regime. Steheglovitov became the source of ideas and inspirations to the Government reaction, and he was clover at giving political and opposizances to the civilized wildest enterprises of the Black Hundreds He pretected a.sos. ams hired by reactionaries from a judicial prosecution, shut his eyos to the fact that torture was being employed during inquiries into political crimes; and under his rule the judicial authorities manufactured false documents for the purpose of concocting oudence to convict the enemies of the autocrocy. He hunted down the independent Press and all the non-Russian nationalities of the Empire, more especially the Jeus, Poles, and Finns crowning "judiciol" achievement of this renegade jurist was when he used the barbarous medieval judicial procedure, which he had introduced, for the purpose of manufacturing evidence against Boiles, the Jow accused of a ritual murder of a Christian Stehegloustov actually sua ereded in destroying all justice in the courts of Tearist Russia, and thereby contributed perhaps more than anybody else to the fall of Taardom In spite of all those efforts, however, this for mer Liberal slways remained somewhat suspect to the pillars of the Court reaction, and so Stcheglovitov's dream of becoming Prime Minister was never realized In 1916 he retired from the Ministry of Justice and was appointed President of the State Council He was the first of the Tears dignitaries to be apprehended (on the first day of the Revolution, at his house, by a group of citizens) and was brought to the Duma and handed over to Kerensky, who had him arrested in the name of the Revolutionary Authority Recently Stcheglovitor has been shot by the Bolsheviks Struye .-- Professor, learned economist, publicist an l philosopher Collaborated with Plokhanov and In the 'mineties Struce was one of the ferenest followers of and authoratics on Marxiell doctrines in Russia. He wrote the first manifesto laving down the programme of the Itusaian Social Democratio Party, and actively contributed to the first successes of that party both among the Intelligentain and in Labour circles Later, he lost faith in the philosophical and political ideas of Marxism and felt the Social Democratic Party Struve then took a prominent part in the idealist (noe Kantian) movement, which at that time was rallying a considerable part of the Russian Intelligentsia At the same time in politics he maned the Liberals Before the liberation movement of 1905. Struva went to Stuttgart where he edited a Russian newspaper, Osvobordenie (" Liberation "), do toted to propaganda against the Tsardom and in favour of a parliamentary constitution for Russia In spita of all measures taken by the Tsarist police. that periodical was brought into Russia in great numbers by the agents of the "Umon of Labera tion, a very large Liberal Democratic secret organization which arose in Russia towards the end of the last century for the purpose of carrying on a struggle against the Psardom This union absorbed and organ ized all the non Socialist elements among the Intelligenters, the Zemstvo and municipal workers scientists and writers There is hardly a single prominent public man in Russia who has not been at some time a member of this secret society The paper edited by Struce abroad was ita secret organ In 1905 after the famous Manifesto of the 17th of October, when open political work became possible in Illistia. the "Union of Liberation" fell to pieces, its main body forming the Cadet Party, while its Hight wing joined the Octobrist Party. and its democratia elements were dispersed among different Social ist parties On his return to Russia after the 17th of October. Strue o became a promunent Constatutional Democrat and a mein ber of the Central Committee of He was a member that ports for Petrograd of the second Duma In his evolution from Social Democracy to Liberulians. Struce reached the Right wing of the Constitutional Democratio Party, passed through it and was working with the political ilements occupying a position still further Right who may bo described as Liberal Conservatives Being an ardent supporter of the centralist idea, Struve was rather hostile to the aspirations of the non Russian nationalities After the Rotalution of 1917 Miliukov, theu Minister of Foreign Affairs, placed Strute at the head of the nawly formed Ecan omic Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Ho was also very active in the High Council of Economics attached to the Provisional Government, and fater was a member of the Provisional Council of the Republic (Provisional Parliament) At present Struve is a leader of the menarchist movement in Russia

Stutchka.—A Lett barrister, a voient Bolshevik After the Bolshevik coup d'écat Stutchka took a very active part in the destruction of the Russian judicial machinery. The absurd and bar barran "courts" established by the Bolsheviks have received in Russe the contemptuous mck Tarnepol.—A town in Eastern Colica. It was near that fown that the Austro German tecops succeeded on the 19th of Japan 1917, at the very inoment of the Bolahesik revolt in Petrograd, in Breaking through the Russan front, whereupon the Russan army was compolled to accuste Galicia. This retreat was of such a character as to rain! one of many episodes of this cotatrophic retreet of the Russan army et the time of the old regime in 1915.

Tcheromissov .- General Professor at the War Academy One of the ablest efficers in the Russian army, who, however, did not anjoy the general confidence of the Staff circles, owing to his somewhat heutsting policy the entical mement of the Bot shevik revolt. Tcheremuseov then at Pakov (south east of Petrograd) in the capacity of the Commander of the Northern front, adopted a passive attitude and thereby contributed, perhaps unwillingly to the success of the revolt Tcherney .-- One of the founders of the Social Revolutionary Party Chauman of its Central Committee publicist As a political refugee has spent many years abroad, in France and especially in Switzerland On his return to Russia after the Revolution ha hacama (m. Mar, 1917), meen, ber of the Provisional Govern ment as Minister of Agricultura in which office he remained until the Kornilov rebellion when he joined the opposition demand ing the formation of a home geneous Socialist Government Before the Bolshevik coup d état Ichemov carried or a personal campagn against Kreensky, trying to induce hie party to come to an agreement with the Bol aboviks and occupying a some what ambiguous position towards the question of the continuance of the war.

Tchernovital (Czernovich). - The capital of the Austrian Province of Rubovina

Terestchenko.-Belongs to a well known Bussian family of very 1 goutio wealthy sugar rofiners monus. man of independent Terestchenke from the beginning of the war devoted himself en tirely to work in public organiza tions at the front , he was one of the creators of the Military In dustrial Committees which, after the debdele of 1915, took the initiative in re equipping the Rus sian army While working at the front and in these public bodies Ferestchenke was driven to believe definitely in the neces sity for a coup d dtat Ilia wide social connections, which in cluded military circles, made it possible for Terestchenke to do considerable work in that direc tion. When the Provisional Gov erament was being formed Prince Lvov. Charman of the All Russian Union of Zemation who was himself marked out for the post of Prime Minister, proposed (together with several other per sons) that Terestchenko should be made Minister of Finance Thus Terestchenko became a member of the first Torvolu tionary Covernment where he was the only one who had never before been elected to a Legisla tive Chamber After Miliukov left the Government Terestchenko accepted the portfolio of Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which office he remained until the Bol should coup détat. Having been arrested by the Bolshouks at the stting of the Cabinot, Ter estchenke was imprisoned in the fortress of SS Peter and Paul, where he remained for several months

Trotzky (Bronstein).-- Well known Social Democrat, propagandist and publicist A remarkable demagoga speaker During the Revolution of 1905 he was a member of the Petrograd Soviet of Workmen e Delegates, then formed for the first time Trotzky was among those Labour leaders who contributed much to the defeat of the first Russian Revo lution by their extremist watch words and their irreconcilability Having been arrested, together with the other members of the Soviet, on an order of the Govern ment of Count Witte, Trotzky was, with the others, seatenced to be deported to Siberia, whence he e-caped and fled abroad Until 1917 Trotzky hved in different European centres and took an important part in the Russian Social Democratic move ment, where he stood for a middle course between the Men sheviks and the Boleheviks Dur ing the present war Trotzky joined the militant Socielist Pacifists being especially hostile to England The Revolution of 1917 found him in America. whence he returned in April to Busses, one England and Sweeten Profiting by the full freedom rougning there, Trotzky, who knew how to remain prudently in the background until the nght moment, carried on a tenserous and utterly unscrupu lous struggle for power, together with Lenin Tho ill fated Kor nilov rebellion exasperated the workmen and soldiers and drove them, from supporting a Social Revolutionary and Menshevik Government, into the aring of the Bolshoviks and Anarchists . thus the road was opened for Trotzky to the chair of the Petrograd Soviet After this Trotzky began openly to work for an armed rising and the disorganization of the defence of the country It is most charac teristic of the man and his kind that, while preparing a dictator ship and the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly, the Bol shevik demagogues, with Trotzky and Lenin at their head, adopted as their war cry the immediate coavocation of the Assembly and the alleged resistance to it of the Provisional Government. similarly, the destruction of Rusmas military power was started in the name of the 'Revolu tionary Organization by Work men and Soldiers of the Defeace of Petrograd which the Provisional Government began to evacuate in order (the Bolsheviks pretended) to surrendor it to the Germana

With the chairmanship of the Petrograd Soviet begins a new period of Trotakey's activity, not yet concluded and intumetely connected with the terrible and treacherous work of Lenin and his collaborators

Trubstkoy.—Prince G N Diplo mat Supporter of an activo pohery in the Balkans Has been clausen Minister to Ströng, vitin was Director of the Noar East Department in the Minister for Foreign Affairs One of the close collaborators of Vilutacov at the time when the latter was Minister for Foreign Affairs Later when that office was taken of the Company o

Russia the contemptions mickname of "Stut-bka's courts"

Tarnopol.—\ town in Eastern Galicia It was near that town that the Austro German troops succeeded on the 19th of July 1917, at the very moment of the Bolshouk revolt in Percu<sub>2</sub>ral, in breaking through the Russian front, whereupon the Russian army was compelled to execusto Galicia This retreat was of such a character as to remin! one of many episcoles of the catastrophic retreat of the Russian army at the time of the old righms in 1915.

Icheremissoy-General Professor at the War Academy One of the abject officers in the Russian "army, who, however, did not entry the general confidence of the Staff circles, owing to his somewhat heatating policy the critical moment of the Bol should result. Tcheremisson. then at Pakov (south east of Petrograd), in the capacity of the Commander of the Northern front, adopted a passive attitude and thereby contributed, perhaus unwillingly, to the success of the revolt Tohernoy. One of the founders of the Social Revolutionary Party Chairman of its Central Committee, publicist As a political refugee has spont many years abroad, in France, and especially in Switzerland On his return to Russia after the Revolution he became (in May 1917) mem ber of the Provisional Govern . mont as Minister of Agriculture in which office he remained until the Korndov rebellion, when he joined the opposition demand ing the formation of a home geneous Socialist Government Before the Bolshevik coup & état Ichornov carr ed on a personal campalry a_nunt Recently, trying to in theo his party to come to an a_recumit with the Bolshevika and occupying a somewhat ambiguous position towards the quotion of the continuance of the war.

Tehernevital (Georgevich). - The capital of the Austria: Province of Bukerina

Terestchenko-lielongs to a wollknown Bussian family of very A gontle wealthy augar rollners man of independ at in say Torestchenko from the beginning of the war devoted himself en tirely to work in public or, miss. tions at the front , he was one of the creators of the Military Industrial Committees which, after the dilidele of 1915, took the instative in re equipping the Husman army While working at the front and in those public bodies Ferentchenko was driven to believe definitely in the necesesty for a coup detail lise wido social connections, which in cluded mistary circles, made it possible for Terestchenko to do considerable work in that direct tion When the Provisioual Govcomment was being formed, Prince Lvov, Chairman of the All Russian Union of Zematyos, who was himself marked out for the post of Prime Minister, proposed (together with several other per sons) that Terestchenko should be made Minuster of Finance Thus Terestchonko became a member of the first Revolu tionary Government where he was the only one who had never before been elected to a Legisla tive Chamber After Miliukov left the Government Terestchenko accepted the portfolio of Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which office he remained until the Bol

shovik coup d ttat Heving bean arrested by the Bolshoviks at the atting of the Gabinot, Torestchenke was imprisoned in tha fortress of SS Peter and Paul, where he remained for several months

Trotzky (Bronstein),-Well known Social Democrat; propagandist and publicist A romarkable demagogio speaker During tho Revolution of 1905 he was a member of the Petrograd Soviet of Workmen's Delegates, then formed for the first time. Trotzky was among those Labour leaders who contributed much to the defeat of the first Russian Revo lution by their extremust wetch words and their irreconcilability Having been arrested, together with the other members of the Soviet, on an order of the Govern ment of Count Witte, Trotzky was, with the others, sentenced to be deported to Siberia, whenco he escaped end fled ebroad Until 1917 Trotzky hved in different European centres and took an important part in the Russian Sociel Democratic move ment, where he stood for a middle course between the Men sheviks end the Bolsheviks Dur ing the present war Trotzky joined the militant Socialist Pacifists, being especially hostilo to England The Revolution of 1917 found him in America, whence he returned in April to Russia, via England and Sweden Profiting by the full freedom reigning there, Trotzky, who knew how to remain prudently in the background until the right moment, carried on a tenscious and utterly unscrupu lous struggle for power, together with Lenin The ill fated Kor nilov rebellion exasperated the workmen and soldiers and drove them, from supporting a Social Revolutionary and Menshovik Government, into the arms of the Bolshoviks and Anarchists : thus the road was opened for Trotzky to the chair of the Potrograd Soviet After this Trotzky began openly to work for an armed rising and the disorganization of the defence of the country It is most characteristic of the man and hie kind that, while preparing a dictator ship and the dissolution of tho Constituent Assembly, the Bol shevik domagogues, with Trotzky and Lenin at their head, adopted as their war cry the immediate convocation of the Assembly and the alleged resistance, to it of the Provisional Government. similarly, the destruction of Russia's military power was started in the name of the "Revolu tionary Organization by Workmen and Soldhere of the Defence of Petrograd," which the Provisional Government began to evacuate in order (the Bolshevike protended) to surrender it to the Germana

With the chermanship of the Petrograd Soviet begins a new period of Trotzky's activity, not yot concluded and intimately connected with the terrible and treacherous work of Lemm and his collaborators

Trubstrkey.—Prince G N. Diplo mat Supporter of an active policy in the Balkans. Has been Russan Minister to Serbia, then was Director of the Near East Department in the Ministry for Foreign Affairs One of the close collaborators of Minister with the time when the latter was Minister for Foreign Affairs. Latter, when that office was taken over by M I Torestelminko, Trubstrkey became head of the Diplomate Department attached to the General Staff, which office

Russia the contemptuous nickname of "Stutchka's courts"

311

Tarnopel—A town in Eastern Galicia It was user that the Austro German troops succeeded on the 19th of July 1917, at the very mount of the Bolshevik revolt in Petrograd, in breaking through the Ikinasan front, whereupon the Russian army was compolled to example Galicia This retreat was of such a character as to remind one of many episodes of the catastrophic retreat of the Russian army as the time of the old refuse in 1915

Tchoremissov.-General Professor at the War Academy One of the ablest officers in the Russian army, who, however, did not enjoy the general confidence of the Staff circles, owing to his somewhat hesitating policy At the critical moment of the Bol shovik revolt. Tcheremissov then at Pskov (south east of Petrograd) in the capacity of the Commandor of the Northern front, adopted a passive attitude and thereby contributed, perhaps unwillingly to the success of the revolt

Tchernov.-One of the founders of the Social Revolutionary Party . Chairman of its Central Com mittee, publicist As a political refugee has spent many years abroad, in Franco, and especially in Switzerland On his return to Russia after the Revolution he became (in May 1917) mem ber of the Provisional Govern . ment as Minister of Agriculture, in which office he remained until the Kornilov rebellion, when he joined the opposition, demand ing the formation of a home geneous Socialist Government Before the Bolshevik cound dut Ichemov carried on a personal campaign against Keronsky, try-ing to induce his party to come to an agreement with the Bolabruks and occupying a somewhat ambiguous position towards the question of the continuance of the war.

Tchernovital (Greenovich). — The capital of the Austrian Province of Bukovina

Terestchenko-Belongs to a well known Russian family of very wealthy sugar roliners A gentleman of independent means, Terestcheake from the beginning of the war devoted himself en tirely to work in public organiza tions at the front , he was one of the creators of the Military Industrial Committees which, after the dibaclo of 1915 took the mitiative in re equipping the Russian army While working at the front and in these public bodies Torestchenko was driven to believe definitely in the neces sity for a coup detat His wide social connections, which in cluded military circles, made it possible for Torestchenke to do considerable work in that direc tion When the Provisional Gov ernment was being formed, Prince Lvov. Chairman of the All-Russian Union of Zomstvos, who was himself marked out for the post of Prime Minister, proposed (together with several other per sons) that Terestchenko should be made Minister of Finance Thus Terestchenko became a member of the first Revolu tionary Government, where he was the only one who had never before been elected to a Legisla tive Chamber After Miliukov left the Government Terestchenko sccepted the portfolic of Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which office he remained until the Bol shevik coup d that Having been arrested by the Bolshoviks at the atting of the Cabinet, Terestchenke was imprisoned in the fortress of 5S Peter and Paul, where he remained for coveral months

Trotzky (Bronstein) .-- Well known Social Democrat: propagandist and publicist, A remarkable demagogie speaker During the Revolution of 1905 he was a member of the Petrograd Soviet of Workmen's Dolegates, then formed for the first time Trotzky was among those Labour leaders who contributed much to the defoat of the first Russian Revolution by their extremest watch words and their irreconcilability Having been arrested, together with the other members of the Soviet, on an order of the Govern ment of Count Witte, Trotzky was, with the others, sentenced to be deported to Siberia, whenco he escaped and fled abroad Until 1917 Trotzky hved in different European centres and took an important part in tho Russian Social Domocratic move ment, where he stood for a middle course between the Men sheviks and the Bolsheviks Dur ing the present war Trotzky toined the militant Socialist Pacifists, being especially hostile to England The Revolution of 1917 found him in America. whence he returned in April to Russia, via England and Sweden Profiting by the full freedom reigning there Trotzky, who knew how to remain prudently in the background until the night moment, carried on a tenscious and utterly unscrupu lous struggle for power, together with Lenin The ill fated Kor nilov robellion exasperated the workmen and soldiers and drove them, from supporting a Social Revolutionary and Menshevik Government, into the arms of the Bolshoviks and Anarchists; thus the read was opened for Frotzky to the chair of the Petrograd Soviet After this Trotzky began openly to work for an armed rising and thedisorganization of the defence of the country It is most charactoristic of the man and his kind that, while preparing a dictatorship and the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly, the Bolshevik domagogues, with Trotzky and Lenm at their head, adonted as their war-cry the immediate convocation of the Assembly and the alleged resistance to It of the Provisional Government, similarly, the destruction of Rusma's military power was started in the name of the "Revolutionary Organization by Workmen and Soldiers of the Defence of Petrograd," which the Prousional Government began to evacuate in order (the Bolsheviks pretended) to surrender it to the

With the charmanship of the Potrograd Soviet begins a new period of Trotzky's activity, not yet concluded and intimately connected with the terrible and treacherous work of Lenin and his collaborators

Trubstitoy—Frince G N. Daplomat Supportor of an active moles of the Balkans Has been Russian Minister to Sorbia, then was Director of the Near East Department in the Alimstry for Foreign Affairs One of the close collaborators of Miliutkov at the time when the latter was at the time when the latter was the time of the Company of the Late, when that office was taken over by M I Terestchenke, Trubsticoy became head of the Diplomate Department attached to the General Staff, which office to the Baltie Flost, where he was placed in command first of a cruiser, then of the first cruisor squadron, and afterwards of the - submarine division comprising the British submarines on Rus sian service At the moment then the Revolution broke out, Verderevsky was at Revel, where a considerable part of the Baltic Fleet was concentrated. directed the events in the fleet m those days, and hes done much to maintain order and peaceful relations between officers and men. The Minister of Marine, Gutchkov appointed him Chief of the Staff of the Baltic Fleet, later, in May 1917, he was appointed by Kerensky, the then Minister of Manne, Commander of the Baltic Fleet Verderevsky held this post at the time of the first Bolshevik rising (July 1917) Under pres sure of the saliors who were in sympathy with the Bolsheviks he refused to carry out the orders of the Provisional Government to send a destroyer squadron to the Neva to fight the mutineers The Provisional Government then ordered Verderevsky to come to Petrograd to be arrested and tried for high treason A judicial inquiry which took place im mediately established that Ver derovsky s real motive in his act of open maubordination towards the Government was his wish to save the officers of the Baltic Fleet from being lynched by the sailors, and to maintain to some extent the fighting capacity of the fleet. When all the circum. stances of the affair were cleared up the inquiry against Verderer sky immediately ceased After the Kora lov rebellion Verderevsky was appointed Minister of Marine

Verkhovsky.--General. A young

Before the revolution of 1905, when a pupil of His Majesty's Oun Corps de Pages ho was sent to the army as a private because of his sympathy with the liberation movement . He participated in the Japanese War and was awarded the soldiers Cross of St Tool, part in the present war After the Revolution Verkhovsky participated in the organization of the Central Executive Com mittee of the Black Sca Tleet, elected body where, the sailors worked in harmony with the officers, and for a long time conserved the discipline, organi zation, and fighting capacity of the Black Sea Fleet In May 1917 Verkhovsky-was pro moted colonel and-given A command on a fighting sector of the front During the same month he was appointed Com mander of the Moscow Military District where he remained up to the Kormlov rehellion, aften. which he was appointed Minister for War Not long before the Bolshavik coup d état Verkhovsky. without being authorized by the Provisional Government, clared in the Army and Navy Commission of the Council of the Republic that it was neces sary to conclude peace immedi ately, for which declaration he was de facto reheved of his ministerial duties and ordered to depart immediately from Petrograd 'on leave Virabov, V. V.—An ex officer Wadactive in the Zematyon One of the close collaborators of Princa, Leov in the organizing of the All Russan Union of Zemation

A. Moderate Liberal, but an active adversary of autoo racy and the dynasty Tool, an important part in the liber ation movement of the last

318 7 PRELUDE TO BOLSHEVISM

years Durrathe war breaker oil in exacts stenon breats . In at as a representative of the All Russian Union of Zenistres ild has studied th murably the hoods and conditions of army life When Kernneky was Can man I t in Chiel, Virgboy was appointed Assistant of the Chief of his Staff for coul matte ne Zaradny-bon of the famous colla borator in lu licial reforms under I mperor Mexan ler II Hinself a promunent i mut. Zarudny tetired from the bench as a protest analist its reactionary policy and went over to the bar, where he soon became trominent. A remarkable spraker, Zarudny in 1301 was continually teaselling all over Russe in unler to defend in civil and published courte hundreds, of political emmunals, i e activa opponenta of the autocracy By his energy lies saved many of them from the gal lows or impresonment with hard labour, and revealed the entuce of Stcheglovitove justice Immediately after the revolution of 1917 Reconsky instead Zarudny to the post of lires Aspetant to the Minister of Justice Zarudny was cutrusted with the direction of the legis latter work at the Mittaley.

and propagal a sense of release . ha the a tak of the mobile trade the of the federal references of the matters, seems, whose his father had been a rund sent the suture of 1917 Zarulny becare Minister of Justice, in which of se he temained until Zavolko- 1 character sactule of Larusko will be found in the text of the back

Set tember 1917

Zenelnay, Y .-- Prominent revelu tionary journalist Lead in month her of the Central Committee of the Social Revolutionary Party Partian of terrorism in the time of the old risine Delenas to that ming of the Social Resulutionary Party which is clearly in favour of the netional defence | Oborontay | eupported the ldre of a coali tional government, is based upon the co-speration of the Liberal Democratic and Social-+ ist Parties. Zenzinuv returned shortly before the Revolution Russian Usation place of exile in Siberia a little village situated to the north of the Polar Circle on the coust of the Arche Ocean, where he spent five years

Printed in Great Brital 1 by UNIVED BROTHERS LIMITED

MORING THE PAINTON

BHAVAN'S LIBRARY

This book should be returned within a forting ht from the date last marked below

Date of Issue	Date of haue	Date of Issue	Date of Issue
• FEB 1985		1
2 2 JAH 1985			· I
	f	i i
		1	ı
	i	1
	ļ
	1 1
		ļ	]
	1
		t

Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan's Granthagar BOOK-GARD

Call No.947-08/KER/16218to JL. P. L.

Call No. 947.08/KER/16218to Jhe Pre-Lucke to Bolshe vi Sur.

Author A: F: Kerlinstey

Date of Borrower's Date of Borrow issue No. Date of Borrow
29/5/54 A.P. Achullon
29/5/54 A.P. Achullon

29|5|574 A.P. A.L. 8 FEB 1965 414 R-213165